Rentalsman operation 'crumbling'

By MIKE HUGHES

The services offered by B.C. rentalsman offices are crumbling because of a dramatic increase in the workload caused by the tight rent market, Rentalsman Jim Patterson said today.

Five people in the Vancouver office and one in Victoria have been pulled off their jobs in recent weeks because of stress from the heavy workloads, he said in a telephone interview from Vancouver.

His own secretary, Martha Holmes, with the rentalsman's office since it was first set up six years ago, has been told by her doctor to get away from her job.

"In the last week or so, the stress has been starting to get to me as well," Patterson said.

He met with Consumer Services Minister Jim Nielson and his deputy on Monday and today with treasury board officials in hopes of getting some more help.

He said rentalsman operations in the province need another 40 permanent workers.

This year's budget allows him to hire 15 more but he has to get approval for the remaining 25.

Victoria with a staff of about 12 needs another three employees, Patterson said, as do the other regional offices but the majority of the extra staff members are needed in Vancouver.

Patterson said in the two years that he has been rentalsman, the workload has tripled.

"There are now three times as many telephone calls in a month as there were three years ago," he added.

His office in Vancouver receives 35,000 calls a month, he said, and another 10,000 try to get through but never make it.

"It is at the stage now where staff morale is fading and productivity declining because of the stress from the job," he said.

"The system is crumbling."

Patterson said until he gets more help, some services will have to be cut back.

Some of the smaller monetary claims, non-urgent repair problems and other less urgent business will have to be put off for a while.

"Everyone will be dealt with eventually but in some cases it may take a while," he said.

Patterson urged all tenants with problems to attempt to work things out on their own before calling the rentalsman office in order to relieve the strain on his staff.

He said militancy on the part of both tenants and landlords increases as the rental market tightens.

Tenants tend to fight harder about existing conditions because it may be tough to find another place.

On the other hand landlords know they can be tougher because their tenants don't have as many options as they would if there were more rental units available.

But Patterson said he is really upset at the fact that his secretary is having to leave the job. He said she will be given three months off to see if the rest will be enough.

"The public sometimes just seems to have no heart," he said.

"They seem to think that because you are a public servant they should be able to heap all the abuse on you that they want."

Healthy, wealthy, and washed

VANCOUVER (CP) — Canada's health costs could be cut in half if Canadians washed more often, Jessica Ryan, a New Brunswick pediatric nurse, said Monday.

"I sincerely believe that if everyone in Canada washed their hands five times a day and bathed and shampooed at least once a week, health costs in Canada could be cut in two," she told the biennial meeting of the Canadian Nurses Association.

She said Canadians should be educated on how their bodies work. There are too many children in hospital who simply are constipated, and this costs a great deal of money.

Auto Pact talks gripped by crisis

By CAROL GOAR
FP News Service

OTTAWA — As the worst crisis in decades in the Canadian auto industry deepens, Industry Minister Herb Gray has been holding private meetings with automobile executives in Detroit, preparing to open formal consultations on the controversial Canada-U.S. Auto Pact.

The minister's meetings Monday came at a time of new militancy among auto workers.

There are now 22,000 auto workers permanently without jobs — one out of every four UAW members — and an additional 15,000 workers on temporary layoff.

Industry statistics grow more dismal by the month. As of June 14, Canadian production was down 26 per cent from its 1979 level.

Chrysler last month reported a 58 per cent slide in sales compared with the same period the previous year. Ford's sales plunged by 43 per cent and General Motors reported a 15-per-cent drop.

These are merely the latest indicators of a slump that has been evident for several months in Canada and for well over a year in the U.S.

Last weekend, in one of the most emotion-charged meetings in its history, the Canadian Council of United Auto Workers vowed its members would demonstrate in the streets and take over plants, if necessary, to force the government to provide relief for laid-off workers.

Some auto workers are talking about a return to the depression-era tactics in which the UAW was born — when men weren't afraid of a little melodrama on the factory floor.

Gray's latest action, too, comes at a time of increasing restiveness in his own Windsor riding.

Last Friday, a large local auto parts company, Bendix, announced — without any warning to workers — that it was padlocking its doors. The minister arrived home on the weekend to find 800 surprised and angry constituents out of work.

Against this ugly backdrop, Gray will head to Washington Friday to see

Lea given the bounce

Prince Rupert NDP MLA Graham Lea Monday became the first MLA to be ejected from the legislature this session.

Lea was banished by deputy speaker Walter Davidson after a blistering attack on Social Credit dirty tricks.

With debate reaching the boredom stage as the session struggles into its fifth month, Lea, one of the leading NDP hecklers, tore into the government over dirty tricks and questionable election practices.

Speaking on an amendment to the Special Funds Act, Lea called the government sleazy and corruptible but was thrown out before Davidson could ask him to withdraw the statements.

Davidson, who tried to bring Lea to order by pounding his gavel, finally had to rise from his chair.

Lea continued his attack and was ordered out for the day by Davidson.

The amendment, moved last month by Bill King (NDP — Shuswap), stated that because unethical practices have been used to elect MLAs, no public expenditures should be approved by the legislature until questions on such matters are answered.

Outside the house, Lea said: "The electoral practices of the Social Credit party in the last election are politically sleazy and politically corrupt.

"I talk about the redistribution maps, I talk about the $1,000 bills, I talk about forged letters, and when you put all that down if you can't call that anything but sleaze and corruption in the political sense, then I don't know what you could call it."

1981 summit in Vancouver?

ROME (FP) — Speculation is rife among the entourage of touring Prime Minister Trudeau that his government may use the venue of next year's economic summit in Canada as bait for Liberal votes in B.C.

Although Ottawa would seem to be the obvious choice for the 1981 meeting of the seven summit nations, there is speculation the gathering could be held elsewhere — perhaps Vancouver. (Other summit news on page 40.)

Better TV for deaf?

OTTAWA (CP) — A special committee of government and industry officials is undertaking to make television available to the 1.5 million Canadians with impaired hearing, the federal communications department said Monday.

The group will make recommendations on the best way to introduce a new method of solving this problem — a system called closed captioning.

Already used on U.S. TV, closed captioning involves subtitles similar to those on foreign-language films when the viewer's TV set is equipped with a special decoder.

Denticare bill almost ready

B.C.'s long-awaited denticare plan is expected to be introduced in the legislature this week.

Health Minister Rafe Mair said earlier this year he hoped to unveil the program before the end of June. Debate on Mair's ministry spending estimates are expected to begin this week.

Government spokesmen said the legislation setting up denticare has been drafted and there are only a few details remaining.

Indications are that the plan will be phased in over a period of years, probably beginning this fall, with an estimated first-year cost of $35 million. The first stage is expected to cover senior citizens and pre-school children.

Blanket the only clue

Times News Services

KAMLOOPS — A woman reported carrying a baby in a large yellow blanket is the only clue police say they have to follow in the kidnapping of a one-year-old girl from her home Friday.

An RCMP spokesman said Monday a witness reported seeing a woman in her late 20s or early 30s carrying a baby near the boarding area at the Kamloops airport Friday morning, several hours after the infant was reported missing.

A composite drawing of the woman was made by police artists, based on descriptions provided by airport personnel.

The woman apparently boarded a flight for Vancouver and officials at several airports and U.S. border crossings have since been alerted to look out for the woman and baby.

The baby's first name is Marca. Police are not releasing her surname to prevent fake ransom calls to her parents.

The baby was taken from her crib, with her yellow blanket, in the front room of the unlocked house early Friday while her parents slept in another room.

The sought woman is about five feet, seven inches tall and has sharp facial features. Her dark hair was combed in a pony-tail.

As the child's 21-year-old father does not have a large income, police do no believe ransom was the motive.

Prairie rain omega-blocked

The Canadian Press

Meteorological experts have blamed the continuing drought on the Canadian prairies on an atmospheric phenomenon known as an omega block, stalled over the area since winter.

The giant high pressure zone is hovering about 5,000 metres above the parched prairie soil, forcing moist air into the Northwest Territories and the midwestern U.S., John Benci of the Canadian Wheat Board said Monday.

"It is normal for an omega block to influence an area for one or two weeks," said Benci, the board's director of weather and crop surveillance. "When it lasts as long as it has this year, it is very unusual."

He predicted the omega block will remain over Manitoba, Saskatchewan and part of Alberta for at least another four or five days.

Meanwhile, southeastern Saskatchewan got more free water Monday night than it could handle all at once.

A 90-minute outburst, generating winds of up to 83 kilometres an hour, dumped 25 millimetres of rain on the Regina area. And two storms pounded the Yorkton area, northeast of the Saskatchewan capital, with rain and hail, leaving much of that city in what one resident described as a disaster situation.

The downpour added erosion to the problems facing farmers, as it was too late to save crops in most areas.

A skating rink in Francis, 65 kilometres south of Regina, lost its roof.

In Regina, the deluge made two Winnipeg Street subways impassable and filled countless intersections with water. There were reports of flooded basements and several minor power outages in the city.

Amidst all the damage though, some of Regina's inebriated souls found they didn't have to spend the night in jail after a city police dispatcher suggested that officers not bring in any more drunks because the sewer in the police station's basement drunk tank had backed up.

In Yorkton, the first storm struck at about 7 p.m. and the second just after 10. Hail stones, which at times reached the size of golf balls, torrential rains and storm-force winds, left trees uprooted and most streets under about half a metre of water.

Residents of Ebenezer, about 19 kilometres north of Yorkton, also suffered extensive damage. They reported that travel trailers were overturned and power lines in the area were down on Highway 309.

911 dialling in emergency plan 'feasible'

A 911 central emergency number is feasible for the five Greater Victoria municipalities with their own police and fire departments and it will take about two years to set it up, Police Chief William Snowdon said today.

The provincial government would bear some of the costs of such a system, Snowdown told the Victoria police board, but there is no accurate estimate of what the eventual cost might be.

Recounting recent meetings with the B.C. Police Commission, area police chiefs and B.C. Tel staff and radio technicians, Snowdon said the telephone company was reluctant to put a dollar figure on the proposal now.

After obtaining the technical requirements from the five police chiefs and their communications staff, the company will report back, the chief said.

Snowdon said it would handle all police, fire, ambulance and emergency calls in Victoria, Saanich, Oak Bay, Esquimalt and Central Saanich, but not the volunteer fire departments in the western community or areas served by the RCMP, such as Sidney, North Saanich and Colwood.

Mounties are establishing their own centralized telephone systems throughout B.C. Snowdon said in the Greater Victoria area, anyone calling local RCMP detachments after 5 p.m. or on weekends would be connected with the Colwood RCMP detachment.

Police board chairman Mayor Bill Tindall said the counter-argument to a 911 number is that someone can always dial O for operator, but the chief said that often takes a long time to get through.

The operator is also not trained to handle a caller who may be hysterical or shouting at the top of his voice.

Snowdon also said the 911 system depends on centralized radio dispatching for the five police forces and fire departments and as no decision on this matter has yet been reached, the mayor said: "Maybe we're putting the cart before the horse."

The mayor also said local fire departments want to have the volunteer departments connected with the 911 system, but the police chief indicated this wouldn't be technically feasible.

Auto Pact talks gripped by crisis

whether he can secure much-needed improvements for Canada in the Auto Pact, the trade agreement signed by the two countries in 1965, when oil was abundant, when North American car sales were booming and when it seemed as if there was no satisfying the public appetite for the latest big, shiny model.

In its early years, the agreement worked well, ensuring that Canada got a fair share of the jobs and investment. But last year, the country's auto trade deficit tripled to a record $3.1 billion. Canada's shortfall is expected to exceed $4 billion in 1980.

Gray has promised to bargain hard for a share of the action when the Japanese begin building assembly plants in North America.

Canada is not willing to be left with outdated plants producing fuel-hungry full-sized cars while the auto companies build their new fuel-efficient models exclusively in the United States.

Since 80 per cent of the output of Canada's auto plants ends up in the United States, it is essential that Gray secure the best trade possible.

Two Thai planes shot down

BANGKOK (AP) — Two Thai military aircraft were downed by anti-aircraft fire today as Thai and Vietnamese forces kept up a cross-border artillery duel and tens of thousands of Cambodian refugees tried to find a safe haven inside Thailand, witnesses said.

Foreign Minister Siddhi Savetsila said he will call for a UN Security Council meeting to "condemn Vietnam," and likened Hanoi's cross-border assaults to those of a "gangster" and a "demented person."

The Vietnamese attacked across the border at six points, and a Red Cross spokesman said: "We don't have an estimate of casualties but given the extent of the fighting and the density of the Cambodian population it might be in the hundreds."

The incursion apparently was aimed at punishing pro-Western Thailand for allowing guerrillas opposed to the Vietnamese-backed government in Cambodia to operate along the Thai-Cambodian border.

Thai military sources said 130 Thai soldiers were killed or wounded in the assault Monday and that 100,000 Cambodians were sent fleeing in panic from refugee camps. The Thai command put the toll much lower.

Western relief sources said the Vietnamese appear to be in control of at least two large border encampments — Non Mark Moon and Nong Chan — which held tens of thousands of Cambodians.

Shelling was reported at other points along a 55-kilometre stretch north of the Thai frontier town of Aranyaprathet.

Yugoslavia forgives Carter

Times News Services

BELGRADE — Forgiving and forgetting the perceived snub in President Carter's failure to attend Josip Broz Tito's funeral, Yugoslavia today rolled out the red carpet for his state visit.

Yugoslav leaders welcomed Carter's trip as a gesture of U.S. support for Belgrade in the wake of Tito's death May 4.

Yugoslavia hopes Carter will offer economic aid and increased trade, and Tanjug, the official news agency, called that "top priority."

Yugoslavia's economy is suffering badly from chronic inflation and unemployment, and a Western shot in the arm would help immensely.

Western diplomats say it also would be an ideal way to cement ties with Belgrade, while respecting Yugoslavia's proud insistence on non-aligned socialism.

In an interview with Belgrade television aired Monday night, Carter called the Soviet invasion into Afghanistan "a heavy blow to detente and prospects for world peace."

But, he said, "In spite of that serious turn, we make further efforts in every possible way to safeguard the peaceful character of the world and to control the spread of nuclear weapons."

Yugoslavia also has criticized the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, and the matter is sure to come up during Carter's two-day trip.

Carter also paid homage at the tomb of the Tito and added his own floral offering of red roses to others that fill the House of Flowers, as the tomb pavilion is called.

Dam plan opposed

The B.C. government remains firmly opposed to plans by Seattle City Light to raise the height of the Ross Dam on the Skagit River.

The city-owned utility was given approval last week for the dam project by a U.S. federal appeals court.

Environment Minister Stephen Rogers said Monday he still is confident the government and the city can come to some agreement on alternate power supply for the city-owned utility.

The larger lake created by raising the dam 36 metres would flood 8,320 acres of land — 4,720 acres 150 kilometres southeast of Vancouver and 3,600 in the U.S.

Negotiators for the province and the city have met several times since they agreed in 1976 to consider an arrangement for the utility to purchase electricity from B.C. Hydro.

Rogers said both sides have presented final proposals at recent private meetings.

"If negotiations break off, we have no choice but to refer the matter back to the place that it was referred to us from — that's the International Joint Commission."

The court decision Friday by a three-judge panel of the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals rejected a challenge by three Indian tribes and environmentalists to the licence issued to Seattle by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

Seattle Mayor Charles Royer said the decision is good news for City Light.

Rogers said, however, he isn't too concerned that city officials will rush out and raise the dam.

"Since they got permission to do it in 1942 and they haven't done it yet, I don't think it will be done in the immediate future."

NORTH VANCOUVER (CP) — North Vancouver RCMP have issued warrants for the arrest of four California men, charged with operating a pyramid scheme, who failed to appear in court June 13.

All four will forfeit $3,000 bonds.

Harold Mayer Strom, 33, William Richard Cravens, 38, and William Frank Harris, 27, all of San Jose, Calif., and Nelson Rhodes Markham, 31, of Campbell, Calif., were arrested during an RCMP raid on a pyramid-selling meeting in a North Vancouver house June 9.

Feds pledge to art gallery

VANCOUVER (CP) — The federal government, reversing a stand taken less than a month ago, has pledged $4.5 million for a new Vancouver Art Gallery in the old downtown Georgia Street courthouse.

The money will be given to the gallery during the next three years, with an immediate $1 million contribution, said Secretary of State Francis Fox.

Need $50 million: ambulance workers

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Ambulance Employees Union says $50 million is needed to upgrade ambulance services in British Columbia.

About 300 additional ambulance drivers are needed, 100 of them for the Vancouver area, union spokesman Dave Skidmore said Monday.

The government's Emergency Health Services Commission says there should be 800 ambulance drivers, instead of the present 500, in B.C., Skidmore said.

Shots fired in dept. store holdup

BURNABY (CP) — Three men escaped with $200,000 after a noisy holdup Monday at a Simpsons-Sears store here. Shots were fired but there were no injuries.

Police said the robbers knocked down a guard, handcuffed him, grabbed the loot and got away in a car that had been stolen earlier. The car hit another vehicle as it was leaving the scene but was not damaged seriously enough to stop the getaway.

$106,000 set aside to police CAs

VANCOUVER (CP) — The B.C. Institute of Chartered Accountants is setting up a $106,000 annual budget to pay for its new practice review and licensing program.

The program of compulsory inspection of chartered accountancy practices is designed to ensure the public receives maximum benefits from a chartered accountant, said Ron Park, recently-elected president of the institute.

The program will be paid for through an annual licence fee of $30 and an annual levy based on the size of the firm.

Grant to replace poisoned horses

The provincial cabinet has approved a $20,000 grant to the Caravan Stage Co. of Armstrong, to purchase three Clydesdale horses to replace ones which died June 12 after eating a poison on a farm in that interior community.

The grant will allow the theatrical entertainment group to begin its summer tour on schedule. The caravan performs in small communities throughout B.C. and Alberta.

Paul Kirby, founder of the group, said he has no idea how the poison got on his property, but neither he nor the RCMP suspect foul play.

No taping, doctor quits hearings

VANCOUVER (CP) — A Pitt Meadows doctor, facing an inquiry by the B.C. College of Physicians and Surgeons, walked out of the hearings Monday after being told his tape recorder was not welcome.

Dr. Pieter Taams, who was denied a request to have the inquiry open to the public, said he left the meeting when told he would not be allowed to record the proceedings.

Officials would not discuss the charges against Taams. "The purpose of the hearing is to determine if the diagnostic techniques he uses are acceptable," said one.

Girl, 14, two others face murder charge

OLIVER (UPC) — Charges of second-degree murder were laid Monday against three Oliver residents, including a 14-year-old girl, after the bodies of two middle-aged men were found Sunday buried in shallow graves.

An RCMP spokesman said second-degree murder charges had been laid against Leslie Lino Stona, 32; Mary Beal, 57; and the juvenile.

The spokesman said the bodies of John Janos Puskas, 43, and Willard John Warren, 50, both Oliver residents, were found in three-foot graves close to an isolated road near Naramata, about eight kilometers north of Penticton.

Welfare appeals child visit verdict

VANCOUVER (CP) — The superintendent of child welfare is appealing a B.C. Supreme Court ruling that family court judges, not the superintendent, have the authority to decide whether parents of apprehended children have visiting rights.

The ruling was on an appeal of a Vancouver family court decision in which provincial court Judge Reginald Poole ruled his court has no jurisdiction to order the superintendent of child welfare to allow visiting rights to the father of a 15-month-old child.

The child was apprehended last December under the Protection of Children's Act, now called the Family and Child Service Act. The superintendent is seeking a permanent commital order from family court to allow the child to be put up for adoption.

Human resources ministry staff had prohibited the father from seeing the child pending outcome of the case.

The father appealed. Justice W.J. Wallace ruled June 3 that the superintendent "pending final disposition of the case, is without power to grant or refuse access or visiting rights unless ordered to do so by the provincial judge's order."

Signs of sensitivity . . .

The provincial Workers' Compensation Board has a reputation for being slow, rigid, and far more interested in saving money than in helping injured workers.

The reputation may not have been deserved: in an area as emotional as injuries in the workplace, nearly every rejected claim can turn into a cause celebre with the help of political action and publicity.

Be that as it may, the board showed last week that it can listen and be sensitive to the concerns of workers liable to sustain injuries in the course of their jobs.

The board on Friday made public a revised Schedule B, the list of industrial diseases and working conditions between which it will make an automatic assumption of cause and effect.

When a new version of Schedule B was first released several months ago, it was not well-received by a wide variety of workers' groups. Firefighters, aluminum workers and workers in asbestos-laden areas were among the groups concerned they might be unable to gain compensation benefits for employment-related diseases under the proposed schedules.

In the intervening weeks, they and some three dozen other employees' groups have written briefs and made proposals to the WCB suggesting changes in the schedule.

The revised schedule shows the WCB has taken seriously the workers' concerns and has undertaken detailed study to see what changes should be made.

It has agreed to remove a provision of the schedule that had the firefighters particularly upset, one that would have restricted eligibility in cases of heart attack. It has developed the list of cancers believed to be caused by environmental agents until the schedule contains the largest number of cancers of any industrial disease schedule in Canada. It has met the requests of aluminium workers to cover fluorosis and metal fume fever. It has expanded the coverage available to persons suffering from diseases caused by airborne dusts, such as asbestosis.

Some of the workers' demands have not been met, but this is only to be expected. In these areas, and in others where the regulations have been tightened, the board has produced solid medical evidence to back up its decision.

The careful work the WCB has done in revising this schedule should give both workers and employers increased confidence in its ability to deal sensitively with issues of workplace health and safety.

. . . in two departments

The provincial Forest Service has been berated for being insensitive to the environment, resisting the idea of multiple use of forested crown land and siding with the interests of large forest companies.

However, recent instructions from B.C.'s chief forester, William Young, to Rayonier Canada suggest the provincial agency's attitude may be changing.

Every forest company must present five-year cutting plans for specific areas. The plans are analysed by forest personnel, fisheries, environmental agencies and, where possible, public forest advisory groups.

Rayonier Canada holds the cutting rights to one of the most controversial regions. Tree Farm Licence 24, recently renewed for 25 years, covers much of Moresby Island in the Queen Charlottes. It includes land sought by conservationists as a wilderness park.

Moresby Island is rich with old growth rain forest. It also rich with animal, bird and marine life, archeological sites and salmon streams. And it is resplendent with steep-sloped valleys, areas of increasing concern because of the potential for land slides.

Young, who has the final say on company five-year cutting plans, has just rejected one submitted by Rayonier. He extended the former plan for one year to allow the company to address a list of specific environmental concerns in its new plan.

Other five-year cutting plans are now in the review stage. Two have been submitted by MacMillan Bloedel for tree farm licences held on Vancouver Island.

The Nuu-chah-nulth Tribal Council, made up of 13 Vancouver Island bands, claims that MacBlo's cutting plans are deficient on the same items as the Rayonier plan. The council has asked Forests Minister Tom Waterland to ensure that what applies to Rayonier will apply equally to MacMillan Bloedel.

He has yet to deal with the issue, but his reponse may well determine whether Young's handling of Rayonier was a platitude or a genuine change in attitude.

Venice: a symbol of hope

VENICE — The leaders of the industrial world have come here in a vaguely pessimistic mood, but in a way this fabulous city is a symbol of their hope.

Few cities in the world seem more beautiful or more fragile. Yet not one has endured so many broken dreams and alliances and still survived to welcome the latest temporary politicians of the world.

Are Carter, Giscard d'Estaing, Schmidt and Thatcher worried about inflation, old narrow quarrels, and new warrior nations from the East? Venice has seen it all before. For centuries, the scientists have been sure that this watery paradise would be undermined by the restless tides, and even the poets have been predicting "the death of Venice" for centuries. Here is Lord Byron's lament:

Venice's beauty survives despite many natural hazards.

Byron's lament

"Oh Venice! Venice! When thy marble walls
Are level with the waters, there shall be
A cry of nations o'er thy sunken halls,
A loud lament along the sweeping sea!

Well, it wasn't quite like that when Carter and his colleagues arrived. Venice was full of sunshine and the voices of the hawker and the laughter of children.

Some things clearly have changed in Venice. The quiet slip of the gondolas, with flowers on their prows, has been overwhelmed by the hum — sometimes the roar — of the sleek new motorboats, but there are no "sunken halls." Moss thickens at the waterline of the old houses, and fresh new green plants spring out of the crevasses in the ancient walls, but somehow they stand, defying gravity and the gathering pollution.

President Carter came to Venice, fresh from a visit to the Pope, warning his colleagues to beware the invaders of Afghanistan. They had a full agenda: what to do about the common defence of a civilized world — an old Venice question — what to do about the future of Judea and Samaria, of Islam and Jerusalem, and what to do about oil, the new god of the Middle East and of the industrial world.

Nobody is expecting much from this meeting. The contemporary leaders are divided about the Middle East, and even about the defence of the West. They have come here to define long-range economic and political policies, without knowing who among them will be around to carry out their plans after the coming elections in the United States, Germany and France.

Yet this place and time are a rebuke to the pessimistic mood of this conference. It is just 40 years this month since the Nazi military conquest of France. The restoration of Europe since then and the liberation of the colonial peoples are among the greatest achievements of human history. Carter and company are not dealing in Venice with the problems of defeat, but with the dilemmas of success.

Forty years ago, after the Nazi occupation of Paris and the long struggle of the American armies up the spine of Italy, nobody would have imagined that Europe would be enjoying in 1980 the highest standard of living in its history.

Enjoying the sights

Or that Western Europe, despite many differences, disputes and disappointments, could have made such progress in reconciling the ancient enmities of France and Germany and have made such progress toward a Common Market, if not yet toward a common mind.

Even a generation ago, it would have been hard to believe that the defeated nations of the Second World War would in 1980 be challenging the United States for supremacy in the export markets of the world, and that the president of the United States, after having maintained an army of over a quarter of a million Americans for over 30 years in Europe, would be meeting with the leaders of Europe, Japan and Canada in Venice to appeal for cooperation in defence of world peace.

There are obvious differences between Carter and his allies here about how to deal with the Middle East, Afghanistan, and the menace of Soviet missiles targeted on Western Europe, but never in the history of the free nations have their leaders met to discuss their common problems as frankly and on terms of such equality as they have been doing in this conference.

Venice must be enjoying and even being amused by its latest influx of spectacular visitors, by their proclamations and their protective guards — and by their multitudes of reporters, who have very little indeed to report.

Long since, Venice has heard prophecies of its own destruction, of natural forces that would sink it into the sea, of all the other beautiful names that have vanished into the abyss of history.

But here Venice is, beaming in the sunshine, a Coney Island in a cathedral, no longer believing in the religious tradition that produced its monuments, but still alive with the clamor of life and the wondering eyes of a new generation.

"I worked at Squamish boxcar plant, then I was a researcher for the Socred caucus. Then I got hired by Trident Aircraft, then I moved to Ocean Falls. Now I'm just seasonally adjusted."

Recession bargains coming

OTTAWA — For the past year or so, consumers have developed the habit of justifying their purchases of this or that necessity of life, here a stereo set, there a blow-dryer, with the argument that if they don't buy now, whatever it is that they just have to have will cost them 10 per cent more next year.

After making an allowance for a certain, gentle self-deception, consumers who've acted this way have acted entirely rationally. Year by year, the prices of most gizmos and gadgets have jumped 10 per cent, or more, in lockstep with inflation.

Soon, consumers who want to splurge may have to dream up new excuses to justify doing what they intend to do anyway. The rate of inflation won't go down; such would be to dream. But prices may. A bit.

Sales collapsing

In the U.S., which is where our economic future always happens first, retail sales are undergoing what the Pitfield, Mackay Ross investment firm calls "a sudden and massive collapse."

From January to May of this year, retail sales in the U.S. have dropped by 10.3 per cent. This is a more severe decline than happened at the start of the 1974-75 recession, which was in turn the choppiest economic weather that the U.S., or Canada, has gone through since the (gulp!) Depression.

As sales drop, inventories in wholesalers' warehouses, and back at the manufacturers' plants, pile up. Because interest rates are still relatively high, the cost of carrying this unsold merchandise becomes horrendous. The only way manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers will be able to lighten their financial burden, will be by offering their stock to consumers along with discounts, bonuses and once-in-a-lifetime deals.

Pitfield, Mackay Ross forecasts that the U.S. inventory problem will "come to a head six to nine months into the recession," or in the late fall or early winter.

Our circumstances aren't as severe. So far, retail sales in Canada have declined only marginally — down one per cent in April, the latest available month. The level of manufacturers' inventories was little higher in the first three months of this year than in 1979.

As important, Canadian consumers are far better able than are American ones to keep the cash registers ringing. In the U.S., the rate of personal savings is down to 3.5 per cent of after-tax income. Here, it's stayed up at an extraordinary 10.5 per cent rate, unchanged from 1979. Many of us therefore will be able to shelter ourselves through the recession's rainy days by drawing down savings.

But — in all economic stories there is always, somewhere, a but — we are as a country far less able to ride out the recession itself than is the U.S.

The U.S. already has put part of the shock of oil prices behind it: Gasoline there now is 50 cents a gallon higher than here. The Trudeau government, as everyone knows, will end up hiking oil prices by as much as the Clark government would have — as soon as it's figured out how to fudge the figures. The more we pay for oil, when this day of reckoning comes, the less we'll have to shell out for gizmos and gadgets.

Also, Ottawa is in incomparably worse financial shape than is Washington. As you'd expect. Our budget deficit is $14 billion, and counting; theirs is proportionately is one-quarter the size.

So, Finance Minister Allan MacEachen's response to the Statistics Canada's report of last week that our economy has begun "a cyclical downturn," was to say that he couldn't afford to give it a kick upwards by cutting taxes or by spending more money on make-work projects.

Financial mess

By contrast, the U.S. Congress is debating a multi-billion dollar addition to its unemployment insurance program to extend the benefits of workers laid off during the deepening recession.

In summary, as individuals, Canadians have their accounts in pretty good shape, but collectively, as a country, we are in a thorough-going financial mess. Through the recession, which will probably last until mid-1981, Ottawa won't be able to do much more than twiddle its thumbs and hope that Canadian consumers will keep the economy going by digging into their pockets and savings accounts.

Since most of us won't be prepared to dig down that deeply, retail sales will drop off and inventories in the warehouses will mount. About the time the snow flies, so should the discounts and bonuses and once-in-a-lifetime deals.

Good course

Some time ago I completed a course in motorcycle safety and operation, which was put on through the Professional Driver Centre of the British Columbia Safety Council. At the time I found the course interesting, challenging and helpful not just in handling a motorcycle with skill, but in maintenance and probably more importantly in forecasting and coping with potential accident-producing situations on the road. After completing the course, I was enthusiastic and wanted to publicly express my appreciation to the Safety Council. I decided to wait however and see if my appreciation lasted.

Obviously I am still enthusiastic and want to encourage others to take advantage of the course. The instructors were great. To those of your readers who are thinking of buying a motorcycle, or who already have one, I would like to say: Enrol as soon as you can and learn the secrets of 'gyroscopic steering', the hazards of the 'grease strip' and the fun of navigating 'pylons'. — Bill Jack, 3172 Balfour Avenue.

Teach citizenship

I hope that the "portable counselling" project (Times, June 11) of the Victoria School Board is a rip-roaring success if only to make up for the poor way students have been served in the schools over the last number of years.

We have in B.C. an educational system which by its actions or lack thereof admits to no other responsibility than the pursuit of academic or physical excellence — from which the good Lord protect us. There is but little to suggest that the system pays more than lip service to the development of good citizens. There is no policy of firm but fair discipline so as to encourage self-discipline in order to meet and overcome challenges. Instead we have a myriad of options as escape holes. The classroom teachers are quite unable to rely on the support from the system as a whole.

How much more effective it would be if the problem was properly handled at the source in the schools (and homes) before it had the chance to assume the magnitude it has reached.

How very applicable is the old adage that an ounce of prevention is worth a ton of cure.

How much less would we need the expensive adult grade classes in college and how much wasted time of the young people would have been saved.

I read the other day that some professional educator or government youth worker had just "discovered" (I use the word loosely, of course) that young people want boundaries within which to function. Baden Powell taught that 70 years ago and I've been privileged to pass on that message over the years.

I wish the Victoria School Board success but I am not optimistic, nor will I be until the provincial ministry of education stops theorizing and experimenting to the detriment of students and teachers alike, and returns to the earthly problems of properly preparing our young people whilst they are in the school system. — Name Withheld on Request.

Offensive ad

There is little enough to read on your editorial pages without your displacing it by matter offensive to the eye, let alone the mind. I refer to the advertisement (page 5, June 16) in which a do-it-yourself Farrah Fawcett is clearly shown to be enjoying the ridicule which she is incurring on two flabby drunks, who seem likely to split their skulls as they flounder after her.

Even Ellen Goodman, who writes as if she were Katherine Whitehorn in a coma, is a better filler for the centre pages than this junk, aimed at overpaid jeunesses dorees who haven't grasped that the best exercise is to turn the head gently from side to side when offered food.

I find that the portions of your newspaper best suited for the lining of bottoms of barrels are increasing alarmingly out of proportion to the bits that can be read without shrieks of ridicule. — Alison McAdam, 820 Haliburton.

Healing the sick

Having just returned home from the Royal Jubilee Hospital after another heart attack (second in 13 months), please allow me to use your column to thank so many wonderful and dedicated people who we seem to take for granted. First, the ambulance men, followed by the two paramedics who worked so hard and were so reassuring to my wife at the house before taking me to the RJH.

Here, after the admitting formalities, I was taken up to the Coronary Care unit where the doctors and nurses tooks such good care of me for the first six days then out into the ward on Four Central, finally to Four Royal before discharge. I cannot speak too highly of everyone who assisted in my recovery, including those responsible for the high quality of food, variety and service. Thank you all, and may The Good Lord continue to help you in the dedication of your work in healing the sick. — Griff Owens, 31-880 Vernon Avenue.

Visit factory

In the June 14 edition of the Victoria Times you ran a good piece about the Wedgewood factory. As a moving man, I did quite a lot of work for them at Varlestern and had the privilege of touring the factory. It is an education to watch the people handpainting the china. It is a lovely setting. I would advise anyone visiting England to go there; it is open to the public. It's worth the visit. — A. G. Steen, 1410 Fort Street.

Exempt old, poor

Re: the June 18 news item "Exclude all Gulf Islands from Transit Tax" stated by Finance Minister Hugh Curtis:

I wonder if Mr. Curtis will also exclude the all-too-many elderly who are managing to look after themselves despite health problems and age confining them to the house or limited use of outdoors. Some I know couldn't travel by bus if they took a taxi to the nearest bus stop. It's the same old story of those least able footing the bill.

There must be a large segment of the Victoria area population that never use a bus, proving how utterly unfair this surcharge is.

I hope next time the CRD meet they will consider the old and poor for exemptions before more island people are favored. It's too bad this 'silent majority' doesn't have a Mr. Curtis to champion their cause. — R. Ashlee, 246 Sims Avenue.

Nuclear blunderland

By SIMON WINCHESTER

WASHINGTON — Shortly before dawn on Tuesday, June 3, something went wrong with one of the gigantic computers buried deep inside Cheyenne Mountain, near the Western American city of Colorado Springs. The computer, based at the headquarters of North American Air Defence Command, wrongly reported that Soviet missiles had been launched towards the United States from land bases in Russia and from Pacific submarines.

American forces were placed on immediate alert; an electronics reconnaissance aircraft was 'scrambled' from a base in Hawaii; submarine crews readied their own nuclear weapons; Strategic Air Command bombers started their engines.

Three minutes later, anxious air force officers in Cheyenne Mountain, and in the operations room at the Pentagon, realized the warning was a computer error. They scrubbed the alert, and 20 minutes later all American forces were back on routine watch. The Hawaii plane was recalled. No one bothered to wake the secretary of defence. The president was not roused.

The incident might have been no more than a mere embarrassment but for a similar incident last November. And taken together, even those two failures might have been excused. But on Friday, June 6, it happened again. Now the entire defence establishment in the United States is trying to work out what is going wrong.

Two grave results could stem from continuing failures of the warning computers. First, if Cheyenne Mountain continues to place America's huge war machine on alert every few weeks, or days, the military will weary of a warning system the cries "wolf". Missile minders and bomber crews will begin to disregard the alerts — and one day, when there is a real alert, America will find itself with its guard lowered, its missiles and bombers and submarines unready for action.

The second possibility is grimmer still, and is tied up with the curious asymmetries between the two great powers.

According to an informal congressional study of the three computer errors and the resulting three "scrambles" of America's strategic forces, there can be no doubt that the Soviet Union has been made instantly aware of the sudden increase in the U.S. forces' readiness. Moscow, the scenario goes, would have been warned of a mysterious scramble of American aircraft, of increased radio traffic and preparations for war — actions the Soviets would not understand, since they had not initiated any threat.

So the Kremlin would have placed its missile and bomber crews on alert, and, because of one asymmetry — the fact that Soviet missiles are a good deal more vulnerable to air attack than their American counterparts — there would have been huge internal pressure on the Moscow generals to unleash their weapons before they were destroyed in place.

In other words, Moscow could have triggered World War Three simply because America went on alert after being "warned" by a sick computer.

The Pentagon said there was "absolutely no danger" of World War Three, but Congress is not convinced — and a major study of the huge computer system is under way.

As long ago as last March, an official government paper warned that the system used to detect trouble in the world — particularly attacks on American territory — is likely to break down under pressure. Even the Pentagon admits, in a somewhat lame defence, that it does not work when it is needed.

'Well, Dammit, That's Not What This Printout Says!'

"The computers render generally effective support," the Pentagon said in a recent paper. "The principle exception occurs in crisis situations, when commanders need quick answers to a broad range of possible questions." In other words, the computers work when there is no trouble but break down in a crisis.

There are 35 Honeywell computers in the chain known as WWMCCS — the World Wide Military Command and Control Systems, or WIMEX — and they are supposed to warn the country of a vast spectrum of events, from the launching of a missile from a silo near Novosibirsk to the seizure of an embassy in Tehran. The 35 computers are dotted all over the world, in 27 locations (though most are in the U.S.) and they feed data into the headquarters, in Washington and Colorado, 24 hours a day, 365 days a year.

But the computers are at least 10 years old. Some of them, made by the Philco Corporation, are more than 15 years old. They go wrong with dogged inevitability. Recently one was knocked out for what was expected to be 20 minutes, but repairs took two heart-stopping hours.

During the Mayaguez incident, read-outs from the computer found their way into an in-basket, and lay there for an entire day, unread by the general supposed to take action in a matter of minutes.

During the crisis in Jonestown, Guyana, in 1978, WIMEX refused to link up two American crisis teams who needed to speak to each other by a special secret radio channel: WIMEX said they were already using the channel, and frustrated all efforts to allow the teams to make contact.

But errors of this kind are trifling compared to mistakes involving the possible use of strategic atomic weapons. The Pentagon insists that the three individual cases that have now come to light have completely different origins.

The mistake of November last year occurred when a technician placed an exercise tape into the wrong computer — a "live" machine — and triggered a "live" alert.

The June 3 incident may have been triggered by a power failure, and the June 6 error may have resulted from the tripping of a relay in a distant radar station, the creation of "ghost" images of attack missiles, and the subsequent transmission of incorrect data to the Cheyenne Mountain controllers.

The most soothing comment offered by the joint chiefs of staff is that in all three cases the errors were discovered within five minutes "because at all stages along the way there are human beings who can ensure that war isn't started by machine-made decisions alone."

The chairman of the joint chiefs, General David Jones, managed to turn the incidents to the best advantage of his country by telling an audience in Heidelberg that the speed with which U.S. forces went on alert "tells the Soviets that we are ready and can respond in a very few minutes."

But back at the Pentagon, and in the Congress, officials are taking a less sanguine view. WIMEX has cost the United States $1 billion already. Should another $200 million be spent to improve it? Should it be completely rebuilt, at a vastly greater cost?

Should so many machines be forced to make such critical decisions, affecting the lives of so many millions on both sides of the ideological divide?

Washington is in a worried mood — and all because of a tripped relay or two, items that cost a few pennies and are responsible for so much.

Belated homage to an old man who lived 135 years

SMITH . . . he just 'wore out'

By ROBERT H. WILLIAMS
The Washington Post

J.Y. Smith, the Washington Post's obituary editor, and I had agreed that, since I was probably the only person on the staff who had ever interviewed Charlie Smith (no relation to J.Y.), I would write the final story on the man's life, which, at that point had spanned 135 years.

Charlie was in intensive care after doctors had taken his gangrenous right leg (doctors have a habit of getting one out of this life in bits and pieces, the way they did John Wayne), and, although it is a grievous professional sin to allow any celebrity over 100 to exist without a prepared obituary, we had none and planned none, knowing that it could be written at the moment.

Well, Charlie died over a weekend last October, at the age of 137, and both J.Y. Smith and I were snuggled into our lawnmowers and martinis, and The Post ran a wire story about Charlie's death. He died 15 years, almost to the day, from the day I met him, from natural causes. He wore out.

And the fact that he died without my mentioning it has gnawed at me since.

Charlie Smith had been billed as the oldest living American man. And in October 1964 I was stringing for one of the crudest of the yellow tabloids — Midnight, published in Canada — with my home base in Miami. Midnight decided it would like to have a first-person story by America's oldest man, telling what it is like.

Well, I had planned a trip to Ft. Myers, on the Gulf Coast, to pick up a story and pictures about a man who had scalded his baby to death, and so I decided to swing up through Bartow, where Charlie ran a little store with nothing in it except pictures of the Beatles and Dr. Pepper. At the time Charlie was 121.

The way it worked was that such interviews were arranged through the regional office of the Social Security Administration, which wheeled Charlie out like that plaster horse, and the regional director was only too happy to meet me in Lakeland and take me up to meet Charlie.

It was like watching a cicada shell sitting on a tree limb out in the woods: nothing except a transparent bodyless shell with little feet clutching at the bark of the tree, the rest gone elsewhere. Anywhere.

The Social Security people predicated their being on the existence of people like Charlie Smith, who, after all, had worked in the citrus groves until well after the age of 110. Then he retired, Social Security took over and we were all together again.

Charlie told me the old stories: his youth; his enslavement; how he was lured aboard the slavers' ship by a "fritter tree" guaranteed to grow in abundance in the new world; his sale in New Orleans to a man named Captain Smith, whence the surname, and the fact that he became 21 on the day of the Emancipation Proclamation, the day he became a free man as well as a man.

I wrote it all down, and it occurred to me then as it occurs to me now that he was not telling of memories, but memories of memories of memories, a condensation of thought process that eliminates all the extraneous and lets us oversimplify all that Carl Jung was trying to tell us. (Jung was born 29 years later than was Charlie Smith.)

I paid Charlie $30 for his release for the first-person account. For writing it I received $100 and mileage. For the scalded baby story I got $100.

And when we parted, Charlie squeezed my hand in both of his and said, "God bless you."

He had to die with a smile on his face.

Not this! Not to New York!

NEW YORK — All state legislatures are famous for foolishness, but until last weekend none had ever thought of turning love into a requirement for operating an automobile.

This oversight was repaired in Albany the other day when the legislators passed a bill decreeing, starting next year, New York motorists will have to display licence plates bearing the pronouncement, "I Love New York." Gov. Hugh Carey can still save us from this with a veto on behalf of good sense and good taste and, being canny about politics, maybe he will.

The first objection to this offensive decree is political in the most bipartisan sense. A licence plate, after all, is only a metal statement that you have paid a tax to drive your car. In New York City, which adds a so-called "use tax" to the state's licensing tax, the plate tells the world you have been taxed twice.

So you have this tax bill receipt fixed prominently to your car for everybody to see, and it says, "I Love New York." Motorists from other states seeing you in this rig can only conclude that you must be a halfwit. Admitting that you have been taxed, possibly twice, you have to announce right there on your receipt that you love it.

Here is a piece of consummate politician's gall: they are not satisfied with merely taxing you, possibly double. No, not satisfied with that, they also force you to say you love them.

Political folly of this depth is the sort legislators can only stumble into during the dawn hours of the session's final days when lunacy stalks among the sleepless, which was the case here. Imagine the situations in which this declaration of love is going to be read by the citizenry:

While sitting motionless in Manhattan traffic jams and yearning for someone to blame for the stupidity of it all, there — always before your eyes on licence plates of cars ahead — will be the words, "I Love New York." While you are being ticketed on highways by New York policemen, the passing cars will be stating, "I Love New York." Broken down in a pothole, facing hundreds of dollars worth of axle repair, hearing the angry horns of cars backed up behind, you will get out and read on their licence plates, "I Love New York."

In all these situations, "I Love New York" will become words to make you hate New York and everything it stands for, including politicians who tolerate traffic jams, write the speeding laws, neglect to patch the potholes and make you go around in public with "I Love New York" written on your tax-bill receipt.

The second objection concerns taste. Licence-plate advertising of any sort, even when not inflammatory, is tacky and unworthy of a great commonwealth like New York. California, the biggest state, does not force its motorists to purvey Chamber of Commerce advertising on their cars.

Virginia and Massachusetts, with their elegant histories, do not feel compelled to advertise themselves on licence plates with "Father of Presidents" or "Fountain of Liberty." Like California's, their licence plates command dignity and respect by the weighty simplicity of mighty names: "Virginia", "Massachusetts", "California."

Even states that do feel the need for supplementary advertising, lesser states unsure of their grandeur, do not insist on such egregious bilge as a tax-enforced declaration of love. New Jersey is content with the noncommittal "Garden State", reminding us of an antique time before it became the State of Suburbs. Illinois, with a graceful sense of historical values, elects to be simply "Land of Lincoln."

Only New Hampshire's "Live Free or Die" comes close to "I Love New York" for literary licence plate nonsense. And "Live Free or Die" at least has the virtue of sounding bumptiously subversive, suggesting as it does the battlecry of prison rioters at the barricades.

The conclusive objection to "I Love New York", however, is that, being an advertising campaign slogan. It is shot through with the dishonesty of overstatement permissible in advertising but unacceptable as a statement of creed enforced by political authority on millions of persons as a result of paying their taxes.

Many of these licensed car owners may indeed love New York, despite the extraordinarily high tax they have to pay to have their love announced to all humanity, but there are plenty more who do not. What of the people who like New York, but don't love New York? How about the people who don't like New York, but have to live there anyhow? What about the people who hate New York?

These people have rights, too, and one of the charms of New York — one of the characteristics that make it lovable, if you will — has always been that New Yorkers, unlike people from tank towns and less self-confident cities, don't care much what you say about their place as long as you can stand the heat yourself.

If a New York licence plate must say something, the governor could veto the present bill and ask for another that will give motorists a choice of statements ranging from "I Love New York" through "New York Is Okay" and "I've Been Taxed in Worse Places" to "I Detest New York." Let each motorist speak his heart and not a lie. That's democracy.

Objections fail to halt subdivision

A subdivision plan for an 8.5-acre parcel of land between Henderson, Lansdowne and Foul Bay roads was formally approved Monday night by a special Oak Bay council committee.

The cul-de-sac, to be created when the plans are formally registered, will be known as Wessex, a continuation of a "stub" street that already runs off Henderson. The subdivision will be for luxury single-family homes.

A 20-name petition of Henderson residents protesting the failure to include an access into the subdivision off Foul Bay Road was considered by the aldermen.

Presentations were made by four of the petitioners who expressed concern that a cul-de-sac with 27 houses would not have sufficient access for emergency vehicles.

Robert Wishart, 3246 Henderson, said residents did not generally oppose housing in the area but objected to residents of the subdivision having to travel along Henderson. They felt Foul Bay users — particularly Camosun College students — were getting preferential treatment.

Fire chief Fred Leeke dampened the emergency vehicle complaint by pointing out there are several larger cul-de-sacs in Oak Bay where no troubles had been encountered.

Police chief Irving Bailey noted "historically persons living on cul-de-sacs are victimized less frequently" than those on through streets.

A letter from Dr. Milton Baker also was considered by the committee.

Baker wanted to know why the land could not be left in its natural state as parkland and sought assurances there would be a buffer between his property and the subdivision.

Mayor Doug Watts said the provincial government, which directly or indirectly owned the land, had indicated its intention to sell the land for housing "and we bought it at (higher) subdivision, not parkland prices to ensure a good development."

Watts noted the northern half of the municipality is amply provided with parks while the southern end is short.

He told Baker there would be stringent caveats to ensure protection of as many trees as possible and a buffer strip would be required.

Locked-in land review set

Land locked into an agricultural preserve created by Saanich about 18 months ago will be examined during a public meeting this year, council decided Monday.

A second look will be given the Blenkinsop Resolution Area formed to protect the fertile Blenkinsop Valley.

Ald. Irene Block was the only member of council to vote against the motion by Ald. Sandy Noel.

Date for the public meeting has not been set.

A number of residents who attended the council meeting said they have complaints about land inside the resolution area.

Noel said residents did not have a chance to air their views before the land was frozen.

Mayor Mel Couvelier said he finds it hard to defend the resolution area boundaries because some of the land clearly shouldn't be included.

John Cowlin told council he represents a number of property owners inside the resolution area anxious for the public meeting to take place.

Core favored for police HQ

Saanich's civic core has been recommended as the best location for a multimillion police building.

Chief Bob Peterson and municipal staff say in separate reports to council the new headquarters should be constructed on Vernon Avenue.

Council has been considering a site at McKenzie and Quadra.

It held an in-camera meeting Monday after the regular meeting to discuss reports from Peterson and head planner Gil Laurenson.

No decision was made during the in-camera session, a municipal staff member said today. Confidential land matters may further complicate the decision-making process.

Peterson said senior officers discussed the merits of both sites at a meeting June 19 and decided Vernon Avenue is the best location.

The civic core is the centre of the area needing the greatest police attention and is closer to town and the courts than the McKenzie site, Peterson said.

The Vernon location is also closer to the proposed dog facility and helicoperter pad, to municipal hall and the fire department, he pointed out.

It is highly visible to the public, in an esthetically pleasing location, has excellent access north and south for emergency vehicles and the public.

It's a good location if the regional policing concept is ever implemented, Peterson said.

He said building police headquarters in the deteriorating core might revitalize the area.

Peterson also recommended the municipality consider constructing the headquarters larger than necessary and leasing the unused space. Revenues could be used to offset the cost of the building.

There are definite advantages to the civic core but the most important disadvantage involves buying land for the building, Laurenson said in his report.

He said if the municipal-owned lands at Borden and McKenzie are sold and developed at a later date the profits would probably offset the purchase price of civic core property.

In other business, council was told 39 sewer disposal systems in the Ten Mile Point area may be faulty.

A Capital Region District dye testing survey of 52 properties found 18 direct ocean discharges and 13 systems discharging sewage over rocks at water front that eventually seeps into the ocean.

Eight other disposal systems were seeping into ditches or property.

The problem is serious, according to municipal administrator William Tremayne.

He recommended Saanich spend $20,000 to $25,000 from its contingency fund to hire consultants to do a sewer study.

The rcommendation will be considered by council next week.

Maltwood: now it's maybe

The Lord Chamberlain's Players Society is having second thoughts about developing its $7 million replica of a Shakespearean village on Saanich's Maltwood property at Royal Oak.

The Victoria-based society is looking at other sites, a spokesman for the theatre group told Saanich council Monday.

Brian Lightburn, society project manager, said most of the locations are on Vancouver Island but a few are in other parts of the province.

The 6.6-acre Maltwood site may be too small for a large-scale commercial venture like the Globe Theatre and village, Lightburn said.

The society wants the best possible location for what it believes will be a major attraction.

A provincial cabinet minister has indicated support for the project and so has the private sector, he said.

Lightburn said the society is not happy with a recent report from municipal planners calling for a scaled-down operation on the Maltwood site.

He said Saanich is giving a heritage building on the site, The Thatch, special treatment. The Thatch will become a restaurant.

The report places heavy emphasis on the Thatch and says the society's project would be of lesser quality, Lightburn said.

The society is paying for the entire property, yet the Thatch is given priority, he claimed.

Under a tentative long-term lease agreement to be worked out between Saanich and the society's lawyers, the group was to pay the $375,000 purchase price in return for use of the land.

Lightburn said his group is discussing the lease arrangement with Saanich solicitor Chris Nation.

Municipal planner Gil Laurenson says in the report development of the south portion of the site should be minimized to protect the setting and character of the Thatch.

The size of the entire development should be reduced to provide open spaces, the report recommends.

Laurenson recommends all parking needs be met on the site or next to it.

Staff calculated parking requirements and came up with a projected deficit of 554 stalls.

A total 759 parking spots will be needed and 205 have been provided in the village plan.

The Globe project is an acceptable use for the site, but scaling down the size of the operation will ease parking shortages, traffic problems and disruption to local residents, Laurenson concludes.

Babysitting sessions

Babysitting training will be offered this summer by the St. John Ambulance.

The course, designed to prepare teenagers for the responsiblities of babysitting, will be aimed at children 11 to 15.

It will include subjects such as home safety, basic first aid, child care and development.

Upon completion of the course a Lifesaver certificate will be awarded for first aid and, for good attendance and competence.

The course will run five days from 9 a.m. to noon.

Seven sessions will be offered this summer, from July 7 to Aug. 22 at $10 per course.

$4.5M gap in outfall bids

There was a gap of more than $4.5 million between the highest and lowest bidder when the Capital Regional District Monday opened tenders for construction of the Clover Point outfall.

Marine Pipeline Construction of Calgary's bid to build the outfall was $7,378,000 compared with a $2,797,000 bid by K. Viney Contracting Ltd. of Vancouver.

Three other companies submitted bids for construction of the outfall, using the piece-by-piece method.

Dillingham Corporation of Vancouver bid $7,231,210 while Peter Kewitt of San Francisco came in at $3,415,000. The third company, Raymond Concrete Pile Co. of San Francisco, bid $4,859,871.

The tenders will now go to CH2M Hill, the consultants hired by the CRD for the Clover Point project, for recommendations.

CH2M Hill have already been given authority to spend $139,700 plus freight and taxes on 2,850 feet of steel pipe, to be purchased from Interprovincial Steel and Pipe Corporation Ltd.

Another $74,625 plus tax will be paid Shaw Pipe Protections (Alberta) Ltd. to coat and line the pipe.

Polyethelene pipe left over from a previous abortive attempt to build the outfall was found unsuitable, according to CH2M Hill.

CRD engineers hope to sell it elsewhere.

Centre to grow?

Sidney and North Saanich may vote in November on a referendum for a $2,714,000 expansion of the Panorama Leisure Centre.

Sidney council heard details of the plan Monday.

Peninsula Recreation Commission chairman Bill German, who outlined the project, suggested the referendum route.

Sidney and North Saanich operate the centre and would share the cost of expansion.

Central Saanich backed out of the original plan to help build the centre more than three years ago and has indicated it doesn't want to participate in the expansion.

The proposal is based on the province paying one third of the capital cost, about $903,000.

The expansion would include a dining area, multi-purpose rooms, child-care facilities, crafts area, racquet courts, multi-purpose gym and a pro shop.

German asked council to decide on a referendum by Aug. 1 so it could be voted on at the same time as the November elections.

Talks try to avert building strike

VANCOUVER (UPC) — Negotiators in the B.C. construction industry are hoping to avert a province-wide strike by 45,000 workers during discussions today of the employers' latest offer.

Construction Labor Relations Association head Chuck McVeigh said Monday he would meet Roy Gautier, president of the B.C. and Yukon Building and Construction Trades Council, to discuss the association's proposal.

The offer, which McVeigh described as final, includes an undefined new approach to resolving the issue of union affiliation and a $3-an-hour raise over two years, up 15 cents from the previous offer.

The union had demanded a $3.50 hourly increase in wage and benefits over one year.

Talks between the two sides stalled last week when the association rejected a council demand that union jobs be protected from contractors whose employees are not union members.

The council, representing 17 building trades, wants an affiliation clause that would allow the 45,000 organized construction workers to refuse to work with non-union people.

In addition, the clause would ensure that the association could not hire members of trade unions not affiliated with the council.

Wildcat walkouts by some organized construction workers, upset at the stalled negotiations, affected construction sites last week in Vancouver, Houston and Prince George.

But McVeigh said there were no work stoppages Monday.

"There is a whole jungle of non-union labor out there and the name of the game is survival," said union head Gautier.

"Obviously the non-union contractor has the ability to underbid the organized company by using cheap labor. The affiliation clause would appreciably help our fight against non-union organizations."

Saanich water pipe bids open

The Capital Regional District Monday opened tenders for pipe to take the new Saanich Peninsula water line from the McTavish Road tanks to the Sidney boundary and a point near Tanner Park Road.

Four companies bid for each of the three sections of pipe, with 3,660 metres of 18-inch, 212 metres of 16-inch and 2,900 metres of 14-inch pressure pipe and fittings.

The bidders were Johns Manville, $342,388,80, $163,-727,62 and $191,132,24; Stanton Pipes Ltd., $359,542,40, $173,836,40 and $216,818,29; Atlas Turner, $463,362,22, $175,325,15 and $212,635,07; Canron Ltd., $397,070,91, $193,370,89 or an alternate bid of $207,271,83 on the 16-inch pipe and $225,602 on the 14-inch.

Just another rat race

MANILA (Reuter) — The title of Miss Zamboanga Del Sur 1980 will go not to the loveliest woman in the southern Philippine province but the one who represents the most dead rats.

In a move to cut the number of rats plaguing farmers, each of the 37 towns in the province will put up a candidate and back her with the tails of dead rats.

"The aspirant with the biggest number of rodent tails will be automatically pronounced the winner," Gov. Vicente Cerilles told reporters.

Membrane sheaths history

SYDNEY (CP) — A membrane developed by a Sydney engineer is protecting some of Australia's oldest and most historic buildings from dampness.

Widely used in older domestic and public buildings, it can be installed without interfering with the integrity of the structure.

The dampness is caused by the capillary action of water seeping from the ground through stone, concrete, brick or rubble walls. It damages the structure as well as plaster or other wall coverings and often causes an odor from water and decay.

In Sydney, thousands of inner-city brick and stone houses built 100 or more years ago and many large public buildings built during the last century have been damaged because their lead or slate damp-proof barriers have crumbled.

Urban renewal and a move to inner-city living prompted by the rising cost of fuel and cars are making these houses too valuable to be allowed to deteriorate. And there has been a growing interest in the historic and esthetic value of older public buildings.

The waterproof membrane, developed over two years by Chris Greenup, was awarded a gold medal at the eighth International Exhibition of inventions in Geneva last December.

It consists of an embossed polyethylene envelope with welded seams which is inserted in a narrow slot cut through a wall and filled with an insert, quick-drying grout.

The tough polyethylene film will not tear during installation and resists attack from salts and other minerals in the walls. The grout, pumped into the membrane under pressure, forces it into cavities in the slot, locking the membrane into the wall and stopping lateral movement.

Greenup says the grout sets harder than mortar and does not shrink, preventing the wall from sagging.

He has developed machinery for cutting the slot and inserting and filling the membrane and techniques to stop the wall from sagging after the slot is cut.

The membrane has been installed in hundreds of buildings including churches and schools and Greenup's firm is negotiating with the Australian department of construction to use it on 600 houses dating from the end of the last century which are being restored as low-cost housing in the Sydney suburb of Glebe.

Greenup said overseas firms have expressed interest in his technique and he is negotiating with 16 firms for licensing agreements abroad.

Seattle dips

SEATTLE (AP) — Seattle's population has dropped below 500,000 — indicating flight to the suburbs and perhaps rendering the city ineligible for some federal grants, city officials estimate.

On April 1, census day, the city's population was estimated to be 498,000, compared to 530,831 in 1970, city figures show.

Sanjay's death leaves hole in India's political frame work

Times News Services

NEW DEHLI — The body of Sanjay Gandhi, son and heir-apparent of Prime Minister Indira Gandhi, was cremated today on the banks of the Jamuna River.

An estimated 100,000 mourners, led by Mrs. Gandhi and other members of the family, wept as the funeral pyre was lit by Sanjay's elder brother, Rajiv.

However, Mrs. Gandhi, dressed in white, the Hindu mourning color, sat expressionless as the sandalwood flames consumed her son's remains.

Sanjay's death in a private plane crash here Monday leaves a gaping hole in India's political framework and is bound to alter the future of Indian politics.

The 33-year-old younger son of the prime minister was without question the most powerful person in the country behind his mother.

As the son and closest political confidant of the prime minister, Gandhi's death will also change the shape of her prime ministership. There was some concern in the capital Monday about Mrs. Gandhi's ability to overcome the tragedy, but she moved stoically through the day.

At the hospital where Gandhi's body was taken after the crash, she was seen consoling the mother of a flight instructor who died with her son.

Flying was a favorite Gandhi hobby, and he held both private and commercial pilot ratings. He often flew in the early morning before starting his work and was executing a loop in a recently purchased aerobatic plane over the city's diplomatic area when the crash occurred.

Gandhi was viewed by his rapidly expanding political following as a man impatient to correct his country's ills, and someone who refused to tolerate inefficiency. However, his enemies, and he had many, viewed him as an insensitive, politically immature ruffian who had already shown his willingness to run roughshod over India's democratic process.

Many believed that he was being groomed by Mrs. Gandhi as the next member of the Nehru dynasty. Mrs. Gandhi and her father, India's first prime minister, Jawaharlal Nehru, have headed Indian governments for more than 29 of the country's 33 years of independence.

Gandhi was both feared and despised by the bulk of the country's intellectual community. One New Delhi writer recently stated that the key test of India's democracy would be if it could reject Gandhi as a leader.

Gandhi re-emerged as a major force in Indian politics following his mother's dramatic return to power in last January's national elections. He was elected to Parliament for the first time.

But his power far exceeded that of an ordinary member of Parliament. As Mrs. Gandhi's closest political adviser, virtually no high-level appointment was made without his consent, and no important decision made without his participation.

Important decisions were often discussed over a family breakfast.

One major result of the January elections was the emergence of a new block of youthful members of Parliament from Mrs. Gandhi's victorious Congress I Party. Viewed in many circles as the nucleus of the next generation of India's political elite, virtually all were hand-picked as candidates by Gandhi.

That parliamentary group, estimated to include around 100 of the 544 parliamentary seats, will doubtless remain loyal to the prime minister, but without Gandhi's personal protection, political analysts expect it will eventually disintegrate.

The group represented the core of Gandhi's power base, which grew with mercurial speed following his mother's return to power.

He was elected general secretary of the party just last week.

In many ways, post-election Indian politics revolved more around Gandhi than his mother. Political pundits and the New Delhi cocktail circuit often debated which of the two held ultimate power.

Stories abound of how she would give in to his tantrums, but those close to the family said she held the last word.

His power, however, was well-known and widely feared, and drew a sizable contingent of sychophants around him.

But above all, Sanjay Gandhi was controversial. Reticent and shy with strangers, Gandhi grew up, much as his mother, surrounded by the loneliness of power. Gandhi was 3 years old when his mother separated from his father, a member of Parliament named Feroz Gandhi, and moved into Nehru's official residence to assume the role as de facto first lady.

Gandhi's only advanced education was a two-year apprenticeship as a mechanic at Rolls-Royce in Britain. In the early 1970s, he set up a private company with government assistance to develop a low cost "peoples car," but the venture ended in a fiasco.

Only a handful of prototypes were ever built, and the car was never commercially marketed. A scathing report on the affair published by the Janata government that defeated Mrs. Gandhi in 1977, led to criminal charges against Gandhi. The charges were dropped after Mrs. Gandhi's return to power. Gandhi was said to have been personally humiliated by the project's failure. "It was something you never mentioned," a family friend said.

Gandhi first became active in politics as a participant and eventual leader of the Congress Party's Youth Organization. He rose to prominence during Mrs. Gandhi's 21-month emergency rule of the mid-'70s.

He developed a five-point plan of action during that period that included ambitious birth control and slum-clearance programs. But his insensitive, sometimes brutal efforts to achieve program targets embarrassed his mother's allies, enraged her enemies, and alienated a sizable portion of the Indian electorate.

Gandhi was married to a New Delhi magazine editor.

Envoy's coffin misplaced

MOSCOW (UPI) — Due to a Soviet mixup, the body of Chad's ambassador to Moscow was left unprotected in a coffin on a hot airport tarmac for three days last week, prompting a furious protest by African diplomats, sources said Monday.

The misplaced coffin further compounded an already delicate diplomatic incident that began when the Soviet Aeroflot airline demanded $12,000 in Western currency in advance to fly the body of Ambassador Baba Hasan and four members of the Chad delegation to Ndjamena, the capital of Chad.

Hasan died June 7 of cerebral hemorrhage in a Soviet hospital, but efforts to fly his body out immediately were complicated by the civil war in Chad that periodically closes the airport in the capital.

A plane carrying the Chad delegation finally left last Tuesday, but upon arrival at a refueling stop officials were unable to find the coffin.

Soviet officials were unable to locate the body. The Chad charge d'affaires finally found the coffin sitting on the tarmac in the sun unprotected at Moscow's Sheremetyevo airport.

Chad officials and diplomats from Kenya, Cameroon and Togo led a diplomatic protest to the Soviets over the incident.

When the coffin finally was shipped last Friday, virtually the entire African ambassadorial corps turned out at the airport in a show of respect, sources said.

The death of Hasan, one of the senior diplomats in Moscow, also created problems in relocating his family.

Sources said his three wives and 11 children were virtually penniless in Moscow.

BBC beamed spy signals: Soviet paper

MOSCOW (Reuter) — A Soviet newspaper charged today that the BBC included spy codes in its programs beamed abroad, to tip off British agents.

The newspaper Sovietskaya Rossiya (Soviet Russia) said "phrases and tunes" agreed off beforehand with British spies were inserted into the BBC's broadcasts.

The newspaper said Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's call to the BBC to allot more air space to programs beamed to Eastern Europe was directed at "inciting ideological subversion against the Socialist world."

Terms unspecified for hostages

Times News Services

Iranian Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh says unspecified "political and economic conditions" must be met before the 53 American hostages are released, and their fate may be decided by parliament in four to five weeks.

Ghotbzadeh would not detail those conditions, nor was it clear whether the United States must meet the "conditions," or whether "conditions" in Iran had to improve before the new parliament could consider the hostages' freedom.

"Before the hostages are liberated there are political and economic conditions," he said in an interview Monday with French television during a stopover in Paris on his way home from a meeting of Islamic ministers.

Speaking with reporters later, Ghotbzadeh said the Islamic militants holding the hostages "have already given assurance" they will abide by the parliament's decision.

But any optimism about a quick release for the 53 Americans held in Iran was dampened by a radical Islamic party which urged the Iranian parliament to have the hostages tried as spies.

"Imam Khomeini (the revolutionary leader) and the Iranian nation believe that the hostages are spies and must be tried," the Struggling Moslems' Movement, which is close to the Americans' Islamic student captors, said today in its party newspaper, Ommat. "Those deputies who do not ask for trying the hostages are in fact compromisers who resist the demands of Imam Khomeini."

Meanwhile, the official Pars news agency reported today that 15 insurgents in northwest Iran were sentenced to death and executed Monday.

It said they were found guilty of killing the governor-general of Khoy, a town in Iran's northwest Azerbaijan province; and six revolutionary guards including the town's guard commander.

Meanwhile, the U.S. state department granted an exemption to Barbara Timm to visit her captive U.S. marine son again in Tehran.

In Washington, a state department spokesman said Mrs. Timm, of Oak Creek, Wis., was granted the exemption from President Carter's ban on travel to Iran for humanitarian reasons.

"She requested permission to go with her attorney and it was granted," the spokesman said.

Mrs. Timm, who met with her 20-year-old son, marine Sgt. Kevin Hermening during a 10-day trip to Tehran in April, said she has not decided whether she will return. "At this moment I can truthfully say I do not know if I'll go," she said.

Mrs. Timm was in Iran at the time of the aborted rescue mission April 25 and apologized to the Iranian people. Later she said she was speaking only for herself and her husband.

Taylor eyes N.Y. post

VANCOUVER (UPC) — Kenneth Taylor, who gained international recognition as Canada's ambassador to Iran by aiding six American diplomats flee Tehran, said Tuesday he expects to be appointed Canadian consul-general to New York.

Speaking on a local radio talk show, Taylor said he was delighted with the appointment, though he added it was not confirmed "officially" when he left Ottawa to address the Men's Canadian Club in Vancouver.

Life proved 3½ billion years ago

WASHINGTON (UPI) — American and Australian scientists now have direct evidence of the oldest biological cells ever found on earth — the remains of tiny, bacteria-like creatures that lived more than 3.5 billion years ago.

Discovery of the so-called "cellular mummies" in two sets of rocks from western Australia was announced by the National Science Foundation, which supported the work along with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and by the Universities of California at Los Angeles and Santa Barbara.

Although the same scientists recently reported finding 3.5-billion-year-old rock formations in Australia that were probably built by similar microorganisms, those cabbage-shaped rock layers did not contain traces of the once-living creatures themselves.

The team of scientists has possessed the fossils for some time but did not make their announcement until analysis confirmed their age and authenticity.

Previous studies had established that relatively advanced forms of cellular life appeared 2.3 billion years ago. The latest discovery indicates biological cells lived about 1.2 billion years later than earlier estimates.

Prof. J. William Schopf, a paleobilogist at UCLA who heads the team of scientists, said the interiors of the old single-celled organisms have long since been filled in by silica and their mucous exterior coats turned to tar by the chemistry of aging.

But, he said, individual organisms can still be distinguished under a powerful microscope. The microscope magnified the images of the microbes by a factor of 1,000, Schopf said.

Schopf and his co-workers — Stanley M. Awramik of UC Santa Barbara and Malcolm R. Walter, Roger Buick and John Dunlop of Australia — said they were amazed when they found that at least five different kinds of microorganisms were present in the thin slices of rock they had cut.

Some were no more than a third of a micron in diameter and others were as big as 10 microns across. A micron is about 1-25,000th of an inch.

Schopf said although the ancient microbes tended to build long chains of single cells joined together like beads on a necklace, they were of sufficiently distinctive size ranges and patterns to warrant the identification of five different species.

The significance of this diversity, he said, is that it means life had already begun to branch out 3.5 billion years ago. Had only one species been found in these rocks, scientists might be tempted to think that this was the earliest form of organized life.

"But because of the diversity, we now know that there was a complex ecosystem even 3.5 billion years ago," he said. "These five kinds had to come fom something prior to that; the origins of life now have to be pushed back appreciably before 3.5 billion years ago, perhaps by a hundred million or a few hundred million years more."

Because scientists believe the earth formed around 4.5 billion years ago, the findings suggest life started and began to evolve well within the first billion years of the planet's existence.

France tests nuclear device

WELLINGTON, New Zealand (UPI) — France exploded a nuclear device at its test site at Mururoa atoll in the South Pacific, scientists said today.

Seismologist Murray Lowry of the Department of Scientific and Indusrial Research said its laboratory at Rarotonga in the Cook Islands recorded the explosion early Monday.

He said it was the second in the current series of nuclear experiments and was estimated at four kilotons. The first explosion a week ago was estimated at 20 kilotons.

The environmental group, Greenpeace, which predicted the first test several days before the explosion, said France was currently engaged in a series of five or six nuclear tests which would run through July.

They said it was believed France was testing a device understood to be a warhead for a submarine-launched multiple warhead missile known as the M-4.

Documents seized as feud splits separatists

By PAUL MINVIELLE

The separatist Western National Association appears ready to split — apart.

In a surprise move last week, association president Doug Christie of Victoria acquired a B.C. Supreme Court order authorizing the seizure of all the group's documents from its Vancouver office, the placing of all bank accounts in court custody and rerouting of telephone calls and mail to Christie.

Donald French, a Christie ally, walked into the association's Vancouver office with a search warrant and two policemen and seized several cartons of documents.

The raid brought to light a feud that began soon after Christie regained the presidency of the separatist group in February.

Christie said he was forced to obtain the court order because association director and secretary Stan Bennett has systematically excluded him from association affairs since February.

In an interview, Christie said of his organization's recent problems: "I feel we have a duty always to clean house ourselves."

Christie explained that the association's constitution specifies any member of the board, or anyone authorized by a member of the board, can view association records.

Christie said he had no idea why Bennett had tried to prevent him from seeing the records until he finally saw him.

"They're in an absolute shambles," Christie said.

He claimed there were disbursements without receipts.

A Victoria lawyer who has become one of the chief proponents of western independence, Christie said he made two earlier attempts to examine the books. But on the first occasion, he and French were met by five "rather heavy looking" men. On the second, they were met by a locked door.

Christie said some documents are missing and he might have to go to court again to get them. He said he regrets the dispute, which has split the association, adding he doesn't know how it started.

"All of a sudden I became an arch enemy and I don't know why."

Although the court order specified all phones calls and mail to the association's Vancouver office were to be rerouted to Christie in Victoria, the Times was able to call the Vancouver office as late as Wednesday afternoon.

Secretary Bennett answered the phone, and although he didn't hesitate to discuss the case, he insisted that much of the conversation be off the record as he says he has been advised by his lawyers to be careful.

"The whole executive has lost confidence in Mr. Christie," Bennett said.

He said that at a general meeting on May 11, 60 per cent of the membership voted to remove Christie as president.

The association's constitution, however, requires that two-thirds of the membership must approve any motion to oust a member of the executive.

Lloyd Kitchen, a Bennett ally, said Christie ran the organization autocratically.

"He always wants to be number one boy and he tried to run a one-man party," he said.

Bennett claimed the only reason the executive balked at giving up association records was that many names on the group's membership list might be considered sensitive.

Bennett also said the executive is going to the Supreme Court to seek an order that would restore the seized documents to the association's main office.

Bennett said he believes if another general meeting were held right now, 80 per cent of the members would vote against Christie.

In an affidavit filed with the Supreme Court, French stated: "That I have reason to believe from personal observations and do believe there are discrepancies in the books and records which indicate that fraud by the director, Stanley Bennett, custodian of the records at 303 - 456 West Broadway, Vancouver, B.C., is being committed."

Despite the dissension within his group, Christie intends going ahead with his speaking tour of 18 western Canadian cities beginning next Tuesday.

He'll be carrying the gospel of independence, and he expects Alberta will lead the way out of the federal fold.

"The federal government is going to force Alberta to the wall and rob them, and if Lougheed doesn't seriously contemplate the possibility of independence, then other people will."

Christie claims the west has far more reason to separate than Quebec ever had.

One development he finds upsetting is the recent federal threat to tax the export of natural gas, something defeated Liberal candidate Gordon Gibson declared in the election campaign would never happen.

"Independence is going to happen," Christie said. "There's no doubt about that."

Christie . . . 'a duty to clean house'

TOWN TALK

Victoria's iron man of running didn't break the world record for distance covered by an individual in a 24-hour period but he still ran a heckuva long way over the weekend.

Al Howie, 35, fell short in an attempt on the world record — 259.45 km — but managed to complete 218.8 km., no mean feat.

Al and more than 400 other competitors, including 21 recreational teams of 20 runners each and three 10-man competitive teams, raised $70,000 for the B.C. Lion's Society for Crippled Children

A 10-man relay team of British Columbians claimed a world record for distance covered in 24 hours by runners over age 50.

The team covered 378.3 kilometres in a 24-hour race for charity during the weekend, breaking the record by more than 6.4 kilometres, said Kevin White, spokesman for the brewery which sponsored the event.

B.C.'s first chief justice Sir Matthew Baillie Begbie will no longer be remembered primarily for his reputation as a hanging judge.

The University of Victoria, on the recommendation of law dean Lyman Robinson, will name its new law facility the Begbie Building.

Begbie's reputation is fiercer than fact. It's believed Begbie intervened with pleas of leniency for a number of convicts sentenced to hang.

Robinson actually suggested the new UVic building be called Begbie Hall, as University of Toronto's law building is called Osgoode Hall, but that was turned down as too pretentious.

A Kamloops-born man who worked as a laborer at Woodfibre pulp mill in the 1940s and went on to become the federal deputy minister of finance is coming to the University of Victoria.

Thomas Shoyama, will teach at the School of Public Administration and the Centre for Pacific and Oriental Studies, effective Tuesday.

After serving under Liberal finance ministers from 1974 to 1979, he was made an Officer of the Order of Canada.

Shoyama, 64, has had stints as special adviser on the constitution to the Privy Council, chairman of Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd., economic adviser to the Saskatchewan government and special adviser to former NDP leader Tommy Douglas.

Friends and relatives of Emily Carr have responded in overwhelming numbers to a call for information about her birthplace, the old Carr family home at 207 Government.

"I've been swamped with calls," said Judy Stricker, researcher with the provincial heritage conservation branch which is restoring the 120-year-old home.

Earlier this month she asked for the loan of photographs and documents as well as personal recollections about events which took place there, such as the fire in 1938.

She got in touch with some of the artist's relatives — one of Emily Carr's three sisters married and her descendants are scattered around the B.C. interior.

One helpful find was the old family bible, in which Emily's father Richard Carr had noted important family events.

Demerit system 'crummy'

By NORMAN GIDNEY

Members of the Victoria police board today criticised the demerit point system of punishing motorists but were told changes are imminent.

"It's a crummy system is all I can say," said Janet Baird, after telling fellow board members what she learned at a recent workshop for B.C. police board members.

"There are people who are actually collecting points," Baird said.

She told the board some drivers are still in possession of their licences with 100 or 200 points.

Chief William Snowdon said it is very difficult to suspend someone's licence.

The driver must be notified — sometimes hard in itself if he or she has moved — and required to show cause why the licence shouldn't be suspended.

Then following a period of suspension, the driver can get the licence back after paying a fine, even though he or she still has 10 or more points.

But the chief said changes are in the offing.

The motor-vehicle task force is due to report within days on proposed changes to the Motor-Vehicles Act.

"I think it's going to make some fairly far-reaching recommendations," he said.

BAIRD
. . . some 200-pointers

Mayor Bill Tindall, chairman of the police board, said it seems the major recommendation will probably be for a combination of demerit points and fines.

"I honestly thought if you got 10 points you got your licence lifted," Baird said.

Police have no way of knowing how many points a driver may have accumulated when they stop him on the highway for another suspected infraction, deputy police chief Jim Smith told the board.

Police query the ICBC computer with the driver's name, address, licence and vehicle licence number but the computer doesn't record demerit points.

"There's no way we can keep statistics on this. In the department it would be a horrendous task."

The superintendent of motor vehicles is responsible for licence suspensions but he doesn't have enough staff to keep up with the volume of drivers who pile up 10 points, Baird said.

"The current system is simply not being enforced," she said.

Alf Hood, another member of the police board, said: "The legislation covering the point system stinks."

Driver survives video test

'I'd give him a pass' - judge

The first drinking-driving trial in Victoria provincial court history in which videotaped evidence was used ended Monday with the acquittal of a 48-year-old man on two charges and conviction on one.

Judge Gilbert Hogg acquitted Spasoje Ristic-Petrovic, 860 Royal Oak Drive, on charges of having care and control of a vehicle while impaired and while having a blood-alcohol content over .08 but convicted him on a charge of failing to remain at the scene of an accident.

Ristic-Petrovic was charged by Saanich police following incidents on the evening of Dec. 17.

Saanich is the first municipal force in B.C. to use videotape on suspected drinking drivers. The police board authorized spending $3,600 a year ago for purchase of equipment. Vernon completed a 10-month pilot program last year.

Evidence was heard that Ristic-Petrovic went to a house at 4883 Sea Ridge Drive and tried to enter because he thought his son was inside. After he was refused entry by 16-year-old Barry Woodcock, Ristic-Petrovic drove into the youth's car three times, driving it into the house before leaving.

Ristic-Petrovic ended up in a ditch at Haliburton and Thunderbird where Constable Gregory Kenneth Crouch arrested him, read him the breath-test demand, and took him to the Saanich police station where the videotaped physical tests were performed.

The four tests, performed with Crouch giving instructions and Constable Howard Gregg McKinnon operating the video camera, were recorded and played back in court.

On the initial test, Ristic-Petrovic had to walk a straight line heel to toe. He wavered on his return trip but otherwise did it reasonably well.

The second test, standing still with head tilted back and eyes closed, was performed without error.

The third test consisted of touching an index finger finger to the nose and Ristic-Petrovic had a little difficulty, brushing his moustache initially.

The final test was raising each leg. He performed it without any difficulty.

"I would give him a pass," Hogg said during his judgment.

The judge noted that Ristic-Petrovic wavered a bit on the heel-to-toe test but said the officer also wavered demonstrating it.

The tests were perfomed at 11:15 p.m., nearly three hours after the initial incident at the Woodcock residence. Evidence was given that 55 minutes were taken up at one point while Ristic-Petrovic tried to telephone a lawyer.

Defence lawyer Brent Kitzke tried to have all three charges thrown out on a no-evidence motion but it was rejected.

Hogg fined Ristic-Petrovic $300 on the hit-and-run charge but allowed him to pay $50 a month after hearing that the accused had a monthly income of $1,700 and expenses amounting to $1,500.

Two held after school break-in

A broken second-storey window on the west side of Victoria high school tipped off police to a break-in at 5:30 a.m. today and led to the arrest of two youths.

Three persons fled when police entered the school, ignoring a policeman's shouts to halt. Two were caught.

Stolen stereo and audio-visual equipment was recovered.

The suspects were to appear in court today.

Man killed in Duncan

One man was killed and another seriously injured Monday might when their late model sports car slammed into a telephone pole in Duncan.

RCMP identified the dead man as Jeffery Claude Olivier, 18, of Duncan, believed to have been a passenger.

Donald Mitcheltree, 20, also of Duncan, was taken to Cowichan District Hospital in serious condition before being transferred to Victoria General Hospital.

Mitcheltree is in the intensive care unit in fair condition.

Police said the car was southbound on Lakes Road to the northeast of town when it went out of control and hit the power pole at Jaynes Road.

Meanwhile, a 23-year-old man has lost his arm as the result of an accident Sunday.

Brian Douglas, of Duncan, underwent surgery Monday at Cowichan District Hospital and is reported in good condition.

RCMP said Douglas was a passenger in a truck driven by Allan John Vandine, 20, also of Duncan, which collided with a northbound car driven by Conrad Cerrer, 39, of Duncan.

Overtime may produce TV problems

By GRANT KERR

LOS ANGELES (CP) — At least three Canadian teams voted against the regular-season overtime rule adopted Monday by the board of governors of the National Hockey League.

Montreal Canadiens, Toronto Maple Leafs and Winnipeg Jets voted against the five-minute, sudden-death period for exhibition and regular-season games beginning next season, the first time in 38 years overtime will be used in league play.

Vancouver Canucks and Calgary Flames supported the motion, which was passed by a 12-9 margin and needed only a simple majority.

"We feel the NHL has studied this matter many times and we don't see any reason for overtime right now," said managing director Irving Grundman of the Canadiens. "We're looking at it with a broader view than some clubs.

"I don't see why we should change it now, even though some people feel it will give some of the better clubs an advantage. There's a lot of excitement created during the playoffs with overtime and maybe we're taking away from that excitement if we're going to have overtime in league play."

Overtime and several rule changes regarding fighting were approved by the 21 governors during a lengthy meeting at the first of two sessions at the swank Beverly Wilshire Hotel.

League games tied after 60 minutes of regulation time now will have a two-minute intermission before the five-minute, sudden-death period of overtime — the first time since Nov. 21, 1942, there's been regular-season overtime in the NHL.

"I don't like overtime, that's all there is to it," said president Harold Ballard of the Maple Leafs. "I'm not in favor of it at all.

"It's the only game that's played where you get 60 minutes of entertainment, not like football. Why put something on people that they don't want?

"I think it's great for the playoffs, but not for the regulation season. The fans have had 60 minutes of hockey during the season and that's enough."

Jake Milford, general manager of the Canucks, said he voted in favor of the five-minute proposal because the 10-minute suggestion might hurt televised games if they went into a fourth hour of prime time.

"I may be crazy, but I was for the idea of one point for the loser and two for the winner in overtime," Milford added. "It's something new for the fan, that's for sure.

"The five minutes of overtime will do just as much for the game as the 10 minutes, I believe. It'll be just as exciting."

Two overtime motions were rejected by the governors, one calling for a 10-minute period and the other for two points for the winner and one for the loser. An overtime winner now will get two points and the loser none; each team gets one point for a tie.

Jerry Buss, chairman and chief executive of Los Angeles Kings, greeted the overtime rule with enthusiasm, adding that he would also favor a shootout system after overtime if the teams were still tied.

"They use a shootout in pro soccer in North America and I'm sure if it went into hockey, it would make hockey the most exciting game in pro sports," he said.

NHL president John Ziegler said overtime "will add a new dimension for the fans" and his only concern "is going into overtime in that fourth hour in some of our 700 televised games each year."

Ziegler and Scotty Morrison, referee in chief, said the governors showed their concern for the game with new rules regarding secondary fighting, a major problem.

When a fight erupts next season, the referee will wave the other players to a neutral area. Failure to go to the designated spot will result in a bench minor for offending teams and a 10-minute misconduct for players. And, any player not in the original fight who drops his stick or gloves will get a 10-minute misconduct.

Players leaving the bench to join brawls now will get a three-game suspension, an increase of two games; attacking players caught in the goal crease will receive an interference penalty; goaltenders' sticks must have nobs; players sticks now can be 58 inches in length, up from 55; substitution will be allowed for coincidental minors when one team is already short-handed; and referees may hand out major penalties for high sticking, even where there is no injury.

Ziegler said scheduling and realignment were to be discussed further today, although he didn't expect any major developments.

And, the league will not experiment with moving the net and goal line out another three feet from end boards.

Oerter journey one of purest

NEW YORK — During the first few months of Al Oerter's comeback in 1976 after an eight-year layoff, he often was approached by friends or strangers unable to understand why a discus thrower who had won four Olympic gold medals would train and toil in a remote quest for another gold medal at Moscow in 1980 when he would be 43 years old.

"What do you have to prove?" he once was asked. "Why risk losing all you've accomplished?"

"You don't understand," Oerter said. "It's not whether you get there. It's the journey."

Because of the Olympic boycott, Oerter won't get to Moscow but his journey still exists. It has him in Eugene, Ore., today and Wednesday for the Olympic trials and it will put him in four post-Olympic meets in Europe against Wolfgang Schmidt of East Germany, the world record-holder and the probable Olympic champion. But the beauty of Oerter's journey is that it is one of the purest in sports history.

In most cases, money influences aging athletes to make a comeback or extend a career. But there is no market for an old discus thrower.

For this athlete to return to competition, the lure simply was the opportunity to do what he most enjoys doing — heaving a 4.4-pound platter as far as he can. In the Track and Field Association meet in Wichita Kansas on May 31, he heaved it 227 feet, 11 inches, his personal record and more than 15 feet farther than he had in Mexico City in 1968 for his fourth Olympic gold medal.

"I don't even have that fourth gold medal now," he says. "I loaned it to the people who made the movie 'Golden Girl' but in recreating a replica, the original was destroyed. All it is now is a little lump of metal. It happened over a year ago but I still don't have a new one. It's starting to annoy me."

No matter how Oerter does in the Olympic trials, his journey will be documented on the NBC network's "SportsWorld" television show Sunday afternoon in a film produced by Bud Greenspan.

"Ironically," says Oerter, "I got the idea for my comeback when Bud interviewed me for another film he was doing prior to the 1976 Olympics. I told him that I'd stayed away for eight years just to give everybody else a sense of security and now I was coming back. I said it half in jest, but I was half serious too. The more I thought about it, the more I talked myself into doing it. And here I am."

It has not been easy, the first six months of his comeback he ached all over. And he has had several injuries.

"Hopping around after one throw, I felt all my weight come down on my right ankle," he said. "I broke that ankle twice. I've pulled leg muscles, I had a ruptured calf muscle, I strained my shoulders, I've pulled chest muscles and stomach muscles. But I'm much fitter now than I ever was. I was fat in Mexico City at 297 pounds. In a swimming pool I could float then. But now I'm 277 and there's no way I'd float. I tried it in a pool in Wichita and sank to the bottom."

When not throwing the discus, Oerter is the manager of the Grumman data communications department. His familiarity with computers prompted this Islip, N.Y., resident to use computer analysis to improve his discus technique. He also has worked with Julie Martin, a ballet instructor who met him while researching a thesis.

Mac Wilkins, the 1976 Olympic gold medalist at Montreal, and John Powell are considered to be our two best discus throwers now. They finished 1-2 in the recent Amateur Athletic Union outdoor championships. Oerter finished sixth.

"But my throw at Wichita," he says, "was farther than Mac's was in the Nationals."

In each of his four Olympic triumphs, Oerter threw farther than the world-record holder at the time — Fortune Gordien in 1956 at Melbourne, Rink Babka in 1960 at Rome, Ludvik Danek of Czechoslovakia in 1964 at Tokyo, Jay Silvester in 1968 at Mexico City.

"I just absolutely enjoy that type of competition, that type of pressure," he says. "I always was better in the Olympics."

Knowing that he can't compete in the Moscow Olympics, perhaps Oerter will be better in the Olympic trials instead.

"When the talk about the boycott first began, I was opposed to it," he says. "I thought that we should show the same strength against the Soviets that Hungary did in 1956 when their team arrived on a freighter in Australia and competed. The same strength that the Czechs did in 1968 in Mexico City — that we should go over to Moscow and knock their jocks off.

"But then my conscience began to bother me. I heard myself saying, 'That's not right, Oerter' and it was not right. But I had to sit by myself for a while before I realized it.

"The difference is the site. These Olympics are in Moscow. If they were somewhere else, fine, we should go. But we should not go to Moscow. We should not compete in the capital of the nation that is butchering a neighboring nation. Whether there are flags or anthems does not matter. We would be playing games with the Soviets and that bothers me.

"If the United States Olympics Committee had voted to send a team and if the president had allowed it to go and if I had made the team, I still would not go to Moscow this year. That would have been my personal decision."

Despite the disappointment of the Olympic boycott, Oerter's journey has only begun.

"There's always 1984 in Los Angeles," he says. "And what the heck? I'll only be 47 then."

Teen-ager with the pros

LONDON (AP) — When the women made their debut today at this year's Wimbledon tennis tournament, a teen-ager with bouncing pigtails and metal braces on her teeth was in among the seasoned pros.

But this time, her name wasn't Tracy Austin.

"It doesn't bother me if people compare us because I know I'm Andrea Jaeger and not Tracy Austin," said the tiny blonde. "But I suppose I will get it wherever I go and no matter how old I am."

But make no mistake. When 5-foot-2, 100-pound Jaeger plays on grass, she is not just "the new Tracy" but a power-packing player in her own right.

The youngest player ever to be seeded at Wimbledon — she is No.14 — Andrea celebrated her 15th birthday on June 4 and already has rung up an impressive list of tournaments as well as $60,000 in prize money since she turned pro at the age of 14.

Now Andrea's sights are set on Wimbledon and she wouldn't mind causing the same sensation here that Tracy did back in 1977. Her opponent in the first round was Britain's Anthea Cooper, 21.

"The first couple of days are always the hardest," Andrea said, a stick of chewing gum in her mouth and freckles dotting her suntanned face. "The surfaces are slick and you're not really used to the bounce.

"But, while I don't try to copy myself after Tracy, I think I can do as well as her."

Her rivals are formidable. Martina Navratilova, the defending champion, played Ilana Kloss of South Africa in her opening match. Austin met fellow-American Alycia Moulton while Chris Evert-Lloyd waits for the second round.

Andrea has had a meteoric rise. She was eight years old when she first started to hit tennis balls against the garage door.

"I didn't really have anything better to do. Right now eight is probably considered late to start tennis. Tracy was holding a racket at two, I think.

"At nine, I started playing local tournaments, then national tournaments and I started winning."

She won the 12-and-under title at age nine, the 14-and-under title at 12 and the 18-and-under title at 14.

When she won the 21-and-under amateur championship at 14, competing against top U.S. college players, Andrea realized "there wasn't anything left."

"It was stupid to play in all those tournaments and win all those rounds and not be able to take the money. So I turned pro."

EDWIN MOSES. . . fastest time of year

Hurdles champ extends streak

EUGENE, Ore. (AP) — World record-holder Edwin Moses overcame poor track conditions and sped to his 46th consecutive victory in the 400-metre intermediate hurdles Monday night at the United States Olympic track and field trials.

Moses's triumph in 47.90 seconds, the fastest time of the year, overshadowed Don Paige's easy victory in the men's 800-metre race in a career-best 1:44.53 and Alice Brown's front-running decision in the 100-metre dash.

But it was Moses who dominated the show before an appreciative, enthusiastic crowd of 13,731 at the University of Oregon's rain-soaked Hayward Field.

In winning his 38th final in a row — only two short of the all-time record for intermediate hurdlers — the usually smooth-striding Moses seemed to encounter a little difficulty with the wet track and appeared to lose his footing briefly on occasions.

Relaxed McEnroe shows new image

LONDON (AP) — John McEnroe defeated Butch Walts on a slippery surface to move to the second round of the Wimbledon men's singles and then talked of his new tennis attitude.

"I've decided to come here and try to look relaxed no matter what," the New Yorker said after carving out a straightforward 6-3, 6-3, 6-0 victory Monday. "It'll have to be a really bad call before I complain."

McEnroe, 21, is trying to play down an image as the bad boy of tennis.

"I'm determined that I'm not going to worry about a few calls. I'm feeling good, better than I've done recently and maybe I can go pretty far."

McEnroe is seeded No.2, behind defending champion Bjorn Borg of Sweden, bidding for his fifth straight Wimbledon title.

Rain wrecked the opening day's program, with only a handful of the first-round men's singles matches completed.

Borg was one of the early winners, downing Egyptian Ishmail El Shafei 6-3, 6-4, 6-4 in a match interrupted by rain for 2½ hours.

McEnroe was never extended by Walts.

"That wasn't one of his better matches," said McEnroe. "I expected more, but it's not really his sort of surface."

McEnroe, who is seeded to meet Jimmy Connors in the semi-final of the world's leading grass court tournament, played with his ankle taped, but denied the long-standing injury was troubling him.

"It's getting better. I'm just wearing tape so I don't turn it over."

Borg said he was a little scared by the slippery conditions at the start of his match with the Egyptian.

"When you're running, you felt you could slip," he said. "But it wasn't really the major problem."

The usually reserved champion was in a relaxed mood and he joked with reporters. He said he felt under less pressure this year than last year, when he was shooting for his fourth Wimbledon title.

"There was pressure on me then because no one had achieved that in modern tennis. I don't feel it now."

The win Monday was his 29th straight at the world's premier tennis tournament. The record is 31 by Rod Laver of Australia.

Among the men who beat the weather to win through to the second round were third-seeded Connors, a 6-0, 6-3, 6-1 winner over Britain's Richard Lewis, and fourth-seeded Vitas Gerulaitis who downed Stefan Simonsson of Sweden 6-0, 6-4, 6-2.

CFL bosses reject taxi squad concept

TORONTO (CP) — The Canadian Football League has rejected the concept of a limited taxi squad for the 1980 season.

In a conference call among executives of the nine teams Monday, the vote was 6 to 3 in favor of implementing three-man reserve units — but unanimous approval was necessary for the rule to be adopted.

Approval would have marked the first time clubs legally would have been able to practice with import players not on their regular 34-man rosters.

The idea was suggested by Hamilton Tiger-Cats, who proposed that those placed on reserve lists would be waived through the league first. Any club that picked up a player would have been required to place him on its active roster. Clubs would have been permitted to negotiate with taxi-squad players with any other club.

"I thought this was a good middle-of-the-road way to try to settle a lot of problems," explained Hamilton general manager Ralph Sazio. "I didn't think it would benefit us in particular, but the whole league in general."

CFL general managers recommended the extra three-man units last month and executive approval had been viewed a formality.

"This is extremely disappointing," said Lew Hayman, president of Toronto Argonauts. "I thought reserve lists would be good for the league as a whole.

"It would give teams the opportunity to develop players through practices."

Bob Geary, general manager of Montreal Alouettes, held a different opinion.

"I was very much against this because I don't want to be a recruiting station for anyone else," he said. "In 1976, general managers from other clubs were always calling the guys on our lists."

Real Madrid draws fine for paying other squad

MADRID (Reuter) — Real Madrid was fined $42,900 by the Spanish football disciplinary committee on charges of paying players of another club to draw or beat a championship rival.

The committee alleged that Real, which went on to win the first division title, offered $12,000 to Betis of Seville if it would hold Real Sociedad to a draw last March. Betis was offered more for a win.

Betis and Real Sociedad of San Sebastian drew 0-0 and the promised money was given to one of the Betis players to hand out at Madrid Airport, the committee said.

The fine Monday follows the banning Sunday of Salamanca's coach on charges of attempting to fix a vital relegation match.

Bosox pitchers play key role as club digs out of early slump

By Canadian Press

Dennis Eckersley says Boston Red Sox were catching heat from writers and other clubs, and they deserved it. Now, though, things look a little brighter.

"Earlier in the year, our pitching stunk," the right-handed pitcher for the American League baseball club said. "We were getting buried — by the writers and other teams — because of our pitching, and we deserved it."

The Red Sox have won 11 of their last 14 games, and pitching has played a key role. Eckersley tossed a seven-hitter Monday night to beat New York Yankees 7-2, the only damage coming on a pair of homers by Yankees' rookie Joe Lefebvre.

"Now our pitching's coming around. I've won three in a row, (Mike) Torrez is throwing better and we're winning."

Eckersley has two straight complete games after suffering through early season back trouble and Torrez has won his last three starts.

In other AL games, Detroit Tigers edged Cleveland Indians 5-4, Minnesota Twins whipped Kansas City Royals 4-1 and Milwaukee Brewers whitewashed Oakland A's, 8-0. In the National League, Los Angeles Dodgers blanked Houston Astros 3-0 and St. Louis Cardinals clobbered Pittsburgh Pirates, 6-1.

Eckersley got all the support he needed when Boston put together a four-run fifth inning against Ron Guidry, 7-5, who lost to the Red Sox for the first time since September 1975. Carl Yastrzemski drove in two of the runs with a homer, his ninth.

The loss, New York's second in a row after nine straight victories, left the Yankees seven games ahead of Milwaukee and Boston in the AL East.

"The Yankees will be tough to beat," Eckersley said, "but we can catch them if good things happen to us."

Jerry Koosman struck out 15 batters, tying a club record, and repeatedly pitched out of trouble as the Twins handed Kansas City its fourth loss in five games. Koosman scattered 10 hits, but on seven occasions he struck out the final man in an inning.

Rick Sutcliffe, 2-4, started his first game since May 9 and responded with a three-hitter to beat the Astros. Sutcliffe, who had been relegated to the bullpen because of his fat 7.04 ERA, walked two and struck out two and came to his own aid with a two-run single in the fifth.

Joaquin Andujar was sailing along with a no-hitter through four innings before things fell apart. He walked two men in the fifth and yielded hits to Steve Garvey, Bill Russell and Sutcliffe. Russell's double drove in the first run of the inning.

George Hendrick slugged a three-run homer in the eighth inning, giving him a major league-leading 57 RBI, as St. Louis dealt Pittsburgh its seventh loss in eight games.

Jim Kaat, 2-4, scattered seven hits for his 266th lifetime win. Ted Simmons also homered for St. Louis in the fourth.

Padres rally to nip Blues

WALLA WALLA — Walla Walla Padres came from behind with two runs in the ninth inning to drop Victoria Blues 4-3 in a Northwest League baseball game Monday.

Victoria was leading 3-2 going into the bottom of the ninth when Walla Walla's leadoff batter drew a walk and a double play attempt sent the ball between second baseman Dave Fonseca's legs for an error which put another man on base.

A sacrifice fly, another base on balls and a base hit then brought both runners home.

Padre starter Neil Bryant and relievers Jim Coffman and Dave White, who collected the win, limited Blues to four hits.

The Victoria club now travels to Bend, Ore., for a three-game series against Central Oregon Phillies starting tonight.

Legion after boost

Esquimalt Legion will be trying to break a deadlock for last place while facing Richmond Roadrunners in a Western Canada Major Junior Lacrosse League game tonight at Esquimalt Sports Centre.

Game time is 8.

Esquimalt, which is tied with Burnaby Cablevision, then travels to Coquitlam for a game against the Adanacs on Wednesday night.

Legion, unlike the other teams, won't get a rest when the league takes a break for the Nation's Cup world tournament.

It was the 15th loss in 16 games for the hapless Warehouse team.

Ed Howell and Don Holmes combined for a one-hitter while Mike Finlayson and Ralph Anderson had two hits each for Farmers, who were awarded the game after five innings because of the 10-run rule.

Canadian women win field hockey

ROTTERDAM (CP) — Cathy Haig of Montreal scored after just 18 seconds of play Monday night and the Canadian women's field hockey team went on to defeat Liberoos, a team comprised of international Dutch players, 5-2 in an exhibition match.

The victory improved the Canadian team's record on its current Netherlands tour to 5-2.

Haig had two goals for the Canadians, with Dana Sinclair of Vancouver, Sheila Forshaw of Toronto, on a penalty corner, and Jane Randle of Winnipeg getting the others.

The teams were tied 1-1 at half time, but the Canadians broke the game open with three consecutive goals in a span of eight minutes midway through the second half.

Canada plays the Dutch under-21 squad tonight and meets the U.S. squad Wednesday night. The team then travels to Cologne for a pair of weekend test matches against West Germany.

Vancouver goalie signs Cosmo pact

NEW YORK (AP) — New York Cosmos have agreed to terms with goalkeeper Dino Alberti, their second-round draft choice.

Alberti, a recent graduate of Vancouver Technical School, signed a one-year contract with the North American Soccer League team.

ROBERTO DURAN

Mobs greet new champ

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — Roberto Duran, the Panamanian who took the World Boxing Council welterweight crown from Sugar Ray Leonard, arrived to a hero's welcome in his homeland Monday.

More than 10,000 people chanting "Duran, Duran" and "Champion, Champion" turned out at Paitilla Airport to watch the plane.

An estimated 250,000 more chanted "Duran, Panama" to the music of salsa bands along the route leading to the city.

'Fast boat'

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — Veteran skipper Dennis Conner steered Freedom to an overwhelming victory margin Monday, handing newcomer Russell Long and his 12-metre Clipper their first defeat in America's Cup preliminary trials.

Long threw the outcome in doubt, however, by protesting in claiming Conner violated the port-starboard right-of-way rule prior to the start.

Asked how he managed to win since Long enjoyed a slight edge at the start, Conner grinned and said, "Fast boat."

Conner, former world Star class champion from San Diego, took command of the race two-thirds of the way down the first weather leg of the shortened Olympic course.

From that point, Freedom steadily pulled ahead of Clipper, which defeated Ted Turner's Courageous in two straight races Sunday.

Long, at 24 the youngest of the American skippers, tried several desperation moves on the next-to-last down wind leg, switching to a lighter spinnaker and sailing high of the leeward mark to block Conner's wind.

Victory near

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — Philip Weld of Gloucester, Mass., was within 400 kilometres of winning the single-handed transatlantic race Monday, but race officials said Phil Steggell of Marblehead, Mass., was closing fast.

"This race is by no means decided," said race co-ordinator Ericka Brigham.

She said a French observer plane flew over the leaders Monday afternoon and spotted Steggell an estimated six hours behind Weld.

Race officials expect the winner to cross the finish line at the Brenton Reef light tower this afternoon with a record-breaking time.

Observers on the French plane said Marc Pajot, a Frenchman and unofficial entrant, was third, followed by Michael Birch, a Canadian now living in England, Walter Green of Yarmouth, Me., and Nick Keig of England.

Weld, a 65-year-old retired newspaper editor, is sailing a 51-foot trimaran, Moxie. He has led through most of the 2,850 mile solo marathon, which began in Plymouth, England, June 7.

Former Shamrock ace plans return to action

Former Shamrock ace Norm Baker has been turning up to practices and could be back with the team within a week.

Ted Espley, president of the Western Lacrosse Association team, feels Baker's return at this time would be welcome, "especially on face-offs and on the power play."

"The Shamrocks are not going to stand pat — we can't afford it," Espley said.

In addition to Baker, the club is considering picking up two big, fast senior "B" players as soon as possible.

"But the three players we need most of all — Ivan Thompson, Bob Cool and Jack Fulton — are all doubtful at the moment," he said.

"We are missing, through retirement and injuries, 14 players from last year's team. I think the Rocks have been playing well considering that fact. We're going to give it our best shot."

The missing:

Fulton — He signed a player's card but he has indicated he would prefer to wait until next year. There's some hope he might turn out later in the season, after the Nations Cup series, which ends July 18.

Cool — Almost certainly retired for this year, at least.

Thompson — A bit of a mystery. He turns out to watch the games but has not yet signed a playing card. Espley said Thompson would be a welcome addition if he decides to come out of retirement one more time.

The injured include:

Dan Green — Not expected back until the playoffs.

Jim Boyd — Injuries are healing slowly. Out for an indefinite period, possibly until the playoffs.

Tej Labh — Almost recovered. Will be back soon.

Baker and either one or both of the senior B players being considered for a callup could be in the lineup for Wednesday's game against New Westminster at Memorial Arena.

As for the missing and the injured?

"We'll have to wait and see."

Sandy tosses shutout

Sandy Milliken hurled a two-hitter to guide New York, New York to a 6-0 win over Butler Brothers at Hyacinth Park Monday night and her team strengthened its hold on third place in the Victoria-Saanich Women's Softball League.

Butlers were only two points behind New York, New York going into Monday night's game but the result widened that gap to four points.

Milliken struck out three and didn't walk any batters and she also drove in the winning run.

There was also a shutout in the night's other game where second-place Bemisters Welding downed McDonald Furniture 4-0. Cathy Ross threw a seven-hitter, striking out four and walking two.

In a Sunday women's tournament in Portland, Victoria Stockers North Americans won three of four games. However, the one loss in the preliminary round-robin contests was enough to keep Stockers from the championship round.

Bob Fox pitched his fifth shutout and Clyde MacDonald hit a home run as Prairie Inn downed Harveys 5-0 in Sidney Men's League action Monday night.

Trafalgar Legion got a homer from Brian Hawkins as it beat Labatts 7-2 in a Macdonald Park Men's League game. Don Maber hit a home run for Labatts.

In another Macdonald Park League game, Coast Projects defeated Mega Power 4-2 with Len Stewart getting a homer for the losers.

And Capital Builders of the Heywood Park Men's League edged Fulford Inn Salters 5-4 on Theo Vandenbergh's homer to win a weekend invitational tournament on Salt Spring Island.

At Topaz Park, Allman's Joy tripped Rawlings 6-1 in a Lower Island Association intermediate "B" women's league game.

The UVic girls earned the Games berth Sunday by defeating Port Alberni 7-1 in the zone playoff final at Lansdowne Junior High School.

Main winners at the annual Drug Caddys' tournament held at Uplands Golf Club were L.H. MacKay (physicians), Dick Sparks (pharmacists), Al Selina (dentists) and Stew Mason (travellers).

Babych signs five-year pact

WINNIPEG (CP) — Winnipeg Jets of the National Hockey League have come to terms with defenceman Dave Babych, their No. 1 selection in last week's entry draft.

The Edmonton native, 19, who played his junior hockey for Portland Winter Hawks of the Western Hockey League, has signed a five-year contract.

Willers takes hammer event

Times News Services

Harold Willers of Victoria was among the winners in the two-day Canadian men's Olympic track and field team's Last Chance meet, which concluded Sunday.

Ken Simperal of Winnipeg, first in the 100-metre event Saturday, became a double winner on Sunday, capturing the 200 metres in a time of 22.13 seconds.

Willers took the hammer throw with a toss of 62.98 metres as Charley Lafontaine of Montreal finished second at 60.42.

Bruce Simpson of Toronto, the Canadian record holder, topped the pole-vaulters with a leap of 5.15 metres.

Other winners included Scott Flagel, Winnipeg (110-metre hurdles); Ron Jackson, Edmonton (400 metres); Glen Rancie, Edmonton (discus); Greg Duhaime, Toronto, (3,000-metre steeplechase); Dallas Allaire, Thunder Bay (1,500 metres); Scott Garrod, Winnipeg (400-metre hurdles); Bob Reindel, Saskatoon (800 metres); Paul Williams, Toronto (5,000 metres); Brian Steele, Brandon (10,000 metres) and Rod Campbell, Winnipeg (shot put).

The meet was being held to fill the remaining positions on the team that will represent Canada in competitions other than the Olympics. Canada is among the countries boycotting the Moscow Summer Games over the Soviet Union's invasion of Afghanistan.

The last chance competition gave athletes opportunities to meet Olympic standards in their events, said meet co-ordinator Dale Kerr.

Most positions on the team were won the previous weekend during the Canadian senior championships in Sherbrooke, Que.

Team selections will be announced June 23.

Austin, Kerr lead

It isn't very often that low handicappers get a chance to outgun the hot high ones in a handicap competition.

Lawrie Kerr and Dick Austin made Sunday one of those days of exceptions.

The Royal Colwood combination, one of the lowest handicapped pairings in the field, toured their home course in par figures to capture the 1980 Centennial Foursomes championship.

Kerr and Austin, 70-4 — 66, finished a half stroke ahead two other Colwood combinations — Dave Stubbs and Al Scott and juniors Bruce Barlow and Bobby Lean.

The juniors came through with a gross 73.

Doug Campbell and Alan McGregor of Gorge Vale tied with Terry Whitaker and Bill Gostick of Glen Meadows at 68.

There are no gross prizes in the competition that was launched in 1958.

Texada clash fizzles

VANCOUVER (CP) — A confrontation between area residents and B.C. Hydro fizzled when heavy equipment failed to show on Texada Island for the scheduled start Monday of construction of a controversial power line to Vancouver Island.

About 80 people from Texada, Powell River and the Sechelt Peninsula were at the site on the island in the northern part of Georgia Strait.

Hydro earlier was granted an injunction to prevent protesters from halting construction of the proposed Cheekye-Dunsmuir transmission line.

But area residents said they would defy the B.C. Supreme Court edict in an effort to force a public inquiry into justification for the line.

Hydro officials said they weren't sure what happened at the Texada site Monday.

Ferry action political, LRB rules

VANCOUVER (CP) — Despite some apparent confusion among the general public and provincial civil servants, there is a distinct difference between the government as employer and the government as lawmaker, the B.C. Labor Relations Board said Monday.

However, in the board's full reasons for a June 5 ruling that ferry workers' study sessions were a political protest against government pension legislation rather than illegal strikes under the Labor Code, board vice-chairman Jim MacIntyre said the B.C. Ferry Corp. is still open to launch a grievance against the union

"It should be, and no doubt is, clear to the union and its members that they have not escaped their contractual obligations merely because their conduct is not characterized as a strike," MacIntyre said, adding such a determination is left to corporation policy and the ultimate decision of an arbitrator if a grievance goes that far.

Members of the B.C. Ferry and Marine Workers Union took part in government employee rallies earlier this month to protest proposed legislation which would increase their pension contributions and reduce cost-of-living indexing of benefits.

The job action resulted in numerous delays and some cancellations of ferry sailings.

B.C. Ferries applied to the LRB for a declaration that the study sessions contravened the Labor Code, but MacIntyre ruled they were political protests similar to the Oct. 14, 1976, national day of protest against federal wage controls, and therefore not illegal strikes.

The ruling stated the protests were aimed at the legislature rather than the employer.

The corporation also sought a ruling that the study sessions violated the collective agreement and so would be a breach of a section of the Labor Code directing employers and unions to live up to their contracts.

But the LRB stated there is no specific no-strike clause in the ferry contract, adding it's up to the corporation to launch a grievance if it thinks other articles of the contract were contravened.

He said the public and public service employees may confuse the Crown as employer with the Crown as legislative assembly.

U.S. tradesmen leave after Canadians beef

KELOWNA (CP) — Eight skilled U.S. tradesmen are back home, leaving work incomplete on a complex $600,000 conveyor system at an area fruit packing plant, following union complaints that the jobs should have gone to Canadians.

The equipment was bought by the Vernon Fruit Union for the grower co-operative's packing plant in nearby Winfield. Purchase price from the Washington state manufacturer included installation.

But last week, the 17-union B.C. and Yukon Building Trades Affiliates posted pickets outside the plant and at the federal building in Kelowna objecting to the presence of the U.S. workers. Federal employment and immigration officials stepped in and the Americans were told they would not be allowed back after Friday.

Packing plant manager Al Jewell said Monday he is concerned that two small conveyor lines that remain to be installed will not be ready for testing by Aug. 1 as planned.

The Canadian unions said the work should hae gone to jobless members in their ranks to begin with and that the Americans were working cheaper.

Before the judge

A 28-year-old woman was sentenced to three months in jail Monday after pleading guilty in provincial court to 16 counts of using a stolen credit card and one count each of impersonation and theft under $200.

Judge Lorne Pearce imposed the term on Jackie Dorothy Horwood after noting she only recently was released from prison.

Crown counsel Robert Mulligan said a wallet and contents, including the credit card, was stolen June 6 in Nanaimo from Maureen Bachor. It was taken at the Nat Bailey's Villa cabaret, the owner told RCMP.

Six days later, Victoria police were called to Murray Goldman Ltd., 1316 Douglas, where they arrested Horwood and a male companion while they were trying to purchase a suit and shirt valued at $215.28 with the stolen card.

Upon further investigation, police found the card had been used on 15 earlier occasions. Total amount of goods purchased came to $580.

Horwood was convicted of possession of stolen property in January and August of 1978, receiving a suspended sentence and probation each time.

She was also convicted of fraud in March last year in Vancouver and was given a one-year jail term.

Pearce said Horwood was a young woman with "a lot of future in front of you," but also noted that "you haven't really learned respect for the law."

"Well madam, you just think about the 14 years you could have got (for impersonation) and don't tempt the court by coming back again," Pearce warned.

Elaine Dorothy Stentaford, 41, who pleaded guilty to her eighth drinking-driving charge, was given the minimum three-month jail sentence, placed on two year's probation and told she may face a lifetime driving ban.

Pearce banned her from driving or owning a car during her probation and said he would suggest a lifetime suspension to the superintendent of motor-vehicles.

Stentaford, who is serving a four-month jail term imposed April 17 by Judge William Ostler after her parole was revoked, was arrested June 4 by Saanich police after her westbound auto struck a tree in the 500-block Gorge Road East.

She was given concurrent sentences of one, two and four months by Ostler for three counts of driving with a blood-alcohol content over .08. earlier this year. She had previous convictions for impaired driving June 30, 1969, Aug. 6, 1975, Oct. 1, 1975, and Jan. 15, 1976.

Through her lawyer, Stentaford said alcohol treatment at Twin Maples, where she was sent by Ostler, was non-existent and that homebrew was being manufactured there.

Defence lawyer Tony Palmer said inmates at Twin Maples were being trucked to the Alouette River unit, a men's institution, for a short time each day.

After hearing about the facilities and programs available for alcoholics at the Brannen Lake treatment centre in Nanaimo, Pearce recommended that Stentaford received temporary release from jail to attend an alcohol treatment program and ordered her to accept any such treatment ordered by her probation officer after she was released from prison.

Fined for drinking-driving offences were: Russell William Walker, 26, of 2626 Cook, $450; Mary Louise Morgan, 24, of 658 Granville, $100; and Genoweja Helena Walczak, 58, of 541 Dupplin, $50.

Deal looked firm: Campbell

The Capital Regional District thought it had a firm deal with Saanich limiting the size of the Tillicum shopping centre to 295,000 square feet, CRD chairman Jim Campbell said Monday in B.C. Supreme Court.

He was the first to testify in the Saanich action against a CRD injunction preventing issuing of building permits for a 495,000-square-foot shopping centre on the 30-acre former Tillicum drive-in theatre site.

Saanich, developers Cal Investments Ltd. and the CRD have already spent several weeks in and out of court discussing points of law and attempting to reach an agreement. Part of Monday morning was spent discussing legal technicalities.

Campbell told the court Saanich directors on the regional board promised a restrictive covenant and persuaded the CRD to drop a court case against Saanich.

The 295,000-square-foot centre was then added to the regional plan.

Campbell said part of the deal, as he understood it, was that Saanich would include the CRD in any plans to expand the centre.

During cross-examination by Saanich lawyer Rodney Taylor, Campbell said he was aware municipal councils are not bound by the word of their CRD directors.

Campbell agreed with Taylor there was no mention of a restrictive covenant in a letter of agreement from Saanich council.

The terms in the letter were acceptable to the regional board during a special meeting last summer.

Directors then voted to rezone the property for commercial use, Taylor pointed out.

Campbell denied he voted against accepting the letter because it didn't satisfactorily limit Saanich's rights with regard to the proposed shopping centre.

The chairman said he believed at the time a 295,000-square-foot centre was a serious detriment to the regional plan and that he wanted the issue to go to court.

Campbell said he was not aware the regional board's rezoning of the property in accordance with Saanich's commercial zoning meant the centre could be expanded in excess of 400,000 square feet.

He said he accepted Saanich's word and didn't read its bylaws.

Campbell said he didn't realize construction of a 295,000-square-foot centre would leave a large part of the commercial property undeveloped.

"I was never told how big it was," he said.

There was never any formal agreement to make the CRD beneficiary of the restrictive covenant between Saanich and the developers, Campbell admitted.

But he said that impression was conveyed to him by Ald. Sandy Noel and former alderman Fred Severson, who were regional directors at the time.

"I had every expectation it (the shopping centre) would be held to 295,000 square feet," Campbell said.

He agreed with Taylor's statement the expanded Tillicum centre was seen as a threat to plans for the expanding Western Community.

But he denied a remark by Taylor those goals are unlikely now because of faulty population estimates by regional planners.

Campbell replied that growth is less than expected throughout the district.

Questioned by Cal Investments lawyer Brian Wallace, Campbell said regional planners originally found the Tillicum site suitable for a shopping centre.

The planning reports were changed after regional staff referred them to Victoria and Saanich for advice.

Victim feared, disliked by inmates, court told

A William Head inmate murdered in prison March 16 had a reputation for violence, a B.C. Supreme Court jury was told Monday.

William Engle was feared and disliked by other prisoners, William Head food services officer Rosolino DeBenediitis testified.

DeBenediitis was a Crown witness on the first day of the first-degree murder trial of William Head inmate Michael Thomas Leslie.

Leslie, 36, pleaded not guilty before Mr. Justice A.B. Mackoff and was represented by Vancouver lawyer Arthur DeMeulemeester.

A jury selected Monday morning heard the testimony of RCMP identification expert Sgt. Karel Chizeck and several other RCMP officers.

A meat skewer, a screwdriver and torn and stained white shirt and T-shirt were some of the items admitted as evidence.

Crown counsel Nicholas Lott said it is clear the deceased was not a nice man, but he was as entitled to the fair application of Canadian laws as any other citizen.

Lott told the court Engle had a criminal record dating back to 1944 that included 20-year sentences for armed robbery and a life conviction in 1973 for non-capital murder. It was commonly known that Engle was serving a term for murder, DeBenediitis said.

Food services officer DeBenediitis testified that Engle had been working in the kitchen from about September, 1979, and did not get along well with kitchen staff.

The morning of the murder he heard Engle and Leslie arguing outside the kitchen.

DeBenediitis said he found a screwdriver about a week after the murder in the officer's mess and gave it to a security officer.

The meat skewer is kept in the kitchen butcher shop. Inmates working in the kitchen have access to that area.

Under cross examination, DeBenediitis said he advised Leslie to "stay away from arguments, especially in a place like this" and Leslie replied that there was nothing happening he couldn't handle.

William Head guard Peter Thorpe told the court he was stationed in the breezeway outside the kitchen the day of the murder when he spotted Leslie leave the dormitory at about 4:40 p.m. and walk quickly out of sight between the laundry and the end of the dorm.

Shortly afterward Engle appeared, supported by two guards.

Corrections officer Robert Cheese said he was with Thorpe when they spotted Engle.

"Mr. Engle had a big red spot on his stomach," Cheese said.

Tenders let for 56 buses

The Urban Transit Authority has let tenders totalling $6.9 million for 56 buses for transit operations throughout B.C.

Twenty-nine of them are for the Capital Regional District to improve service in the Colwood-Langford area and on the Saanich Peninsula.

UTA spokesman John Arnett said General Motors Canada will supply 34 of its 40-foot buses at a total cost of $4.4 million, while Ontario Bus Industries will build 22 buses at 35 and 30 feet for a total cost of $2.5 million.

Delivery of the vehicles is expected to start by the end of the year and will be staged over the first six months of 1981.

"These buses will be going all over the province," Arnett said.

ROLLING INTO SUMMER, Allar Viinamae and Heli Oder barely mind the heat as they roll along a Toronto street with the temperature rising into the high 20s as the first week of summer started Monday.

Racial conflict for bridge

CAMPBELLTON, N.B. (CP) — About 200 whites armed with tire irons and two-by-fours blocked the New Brunswick side of an interprovincial bridge to Quebec Monday in retaliation for Indians blocking the Quebec side to whites.

Police described the situation as tense as 20 Indians from the Restigouche Reserve on the Quebec side walked across the bridge armed with baseball bats. All available police were on the scene and there were no reports of violence.

Quebec Provincial Police said Monday they are prepared to use force if the Indians act on their threat to blockade Route 132 in Quebec.

The Micmac Indians have blockaded the bridge between Campbellton and Cross Point, Que., since Sunday to protest searches by federal and provincial fisheries authorities for illegal salmon in vehicles entering New Brunswick.

Sgt. Julien Landry of the QPP's Matapedia detachment said in an interview a group of between 20 and 50 Indians from the reserve are keeping a vigil on the bridge.

The whites on the New Brunswick side were reported to have told the Indians: "If we can't go to the other side, neither can you."

Landry said a meeting is expected soon between game wardens and the Indians to discuss the searches. Until the meeting is held, police will keep a close watch on the situation but won't reopen the bridge, Landry said.

Commercial salmon fishing is banned in New Brunswick and Quebec but Indians are allowed to catch salmon for their own use. The Indians claim they should also have the right to trade salmon as they wish.

Band Chief Tony Dedam threatened blockades on Route 132, a major highway in the area which cuts through the reserve, unless the searches stop.

The Indians set up the blockade after provincial and federal game wardens stopped and searched an Amerindian police cruiser which was transporting a sick Indian child from Quebec to Campbellton.

The Amerindian police are trained and sworn law officers on some Indian reserves.

The blockade has forced Campbellton-bound tourists and Quebec residents working in New Brunswick to cross at Matapedia, about 25 kilometres away, or to use the Dalhousie-Miguasha ferry, which leaves them 32 kilometres east of Campbellton.

Grim life on reserve forces Indians out

TORONTO (CP) — Maclean's magazine says a previously unpublished survey of Indian conditions produced by the federal department of Indian affairs cites poor living conditions as the main reason an increasing number of Indians are leaving the reserves.

Indian Conditions: A Survey says the number of natives choosing to live off reserves has almost doubled since 1966 and now accounts for one-third of the population, Maclean's reported in this week's issue.

The survey says bad housing, unemployment and a lack of running water, sewage disposal or electricity are the main reasons the Indians leave.

Conditions on the reserves have improved in the last 20 years, one passage of the report says, but there is "a significant increase in social problems among reserve Indians, particularly levels of alcoholism and welfare dependence."

The survey says infant mortalty rates on reserves are four times higher than the national average for children under age five. The children frequently die from gastroenteritis and pneumonia — diseases stemming from malnutrition and poor sanitation.

Maclean's says Indian leaders are also critical of government manpower programs which fail to train Indians for jobs on the reserves. Ottawa commits 6.6 per cent of its Indian programs budget to foster economic development — less than one third of what it spends on welfare payments to Indians.

Yanks in tank

NEWMARKET, England (CP) — A California couple who live in a converted water tower have been named Yanks in a Tank by their neighbors. After two years of work on the home, topped by a 50,000-gallon tank, the £11,000 structure has become a luxury residence.

400 still plan trip to Games

EDMONTON (CP) — It appears about 400 Canadians still plan to attend the Moscow Summer Olympics despite an international boycott of the Games, a travel agency spokesman said Monday.

Bob Glazier, assistant general manager of Sears Travel, said his agency has been hit hard by the Canadian boycott of the Games.

The company, which is the exclusive Canadian booking agency for the Olympics, had 3,500 tours booked at the beginning of the year, Glazier said.

But cancellations started rolling in following international protests over the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, he said.

About 2,000 people were still booked before the Canadian Olympic Association announced in April that it would not send a team, he said. About 1,600 cancelled after the announcement.

Although tours could be purchased through other travel agencies, Sears will suffer all financial losses from the boycott because of its exclusive contract for the Games.

Seventeen-year-old Anthony Geslak won a $50 bet by snatching a toupee off the head of a Hicksville, N.Y. junior high school teacher. But he ends up paying anyway. Geslak was charged with grand larcency and released on his own recognizance. It seems Harold Lucas, 61, was walking down a school corridor when he felt his $400 hairpiece being lifted from his head and saw a youth run down the hall and out the door. The hairpiece was returned, but it was ruined, said Lucas.

J.R. Ewing traded his Stetson for a top hat and stole the show from the queen at the Royal Ascot races. Actor Larry Hagman, who plays the villain of the television series Dallas, was the crowd favorite when he escorted his wife to the high-fashion race track. Queen Elizabeth and the royal family rode down Royal Ascot's grass track in open carriages to a polite reception, but lords and ladies were pointing at Hagman who wore a rented gray morning suit and a matching top hat. "I wanted to wear (my cowboy hat)," he said. "But I was told it wasn't etiquette — whatever that is."

Two men who were refused dinner nearly four years ago in a posh restaurant because they were not wearing neckties have been awarded $18,000 by a Superior Court jury in a sex discrimination suit. Lawyer Robert Hales was awarded $13,000 in damages against the hotel, while Dr. Irving Losner, a physician, was awarded $5,000. The two men had charged the Ojai Valley Inn with sex discrimination on the grounds that women were not required to wear ties in the hotel restaurant. The men testified they did not know each other until August 1976 when they both vacationed with their wives at the hotel, about 100 km northwest of Los Angeles. The men, wearing leisure suits, said they went to the inn for dinner and were told by the staff they would not be served unless they put on ties. The restaurant offered to supply the necessary neckwear. Although both men eventually did put on ties and were served meals, they claimed during the trial they had been publicly harassed and embarrassed by the restaurant. In addition, Hales charged the hotel with false advertising, claiming he was induced to go to the inn, in part, because of a hotel brochure that stated coats and ties were "suggested," but not required. The jury dismissed the false advertising charge.

Dear Abby:

I read you regularly, but I've never written before because I haven't had any problems. However, the woman with multiple sclerosis. asked if she should tell her daughter. I speak from experience as a woman who has had MS for about 23 years.

I have been in a wheelchair for nine years, but it hasn't curtailed my activities. It's electric, and I zip around everywhere. I drive a van with a wheelchair lift, so I'm fairly mobile.

First, that woman should tell all her children that she has MS without making a big deal out of it. When I was finally diagnosed, our three boys were two, five and six. The easiest way to explain MS to children, and adults as well, is to explain that the messages from the brain are carried through the spinal cord to the other parts of the body much like the electricity for a lamp is carried from the plug in the wall outlet to the switch and light bulb. The electrical cord has insulation around it, as the spinal cord has myelin.

Multiple sclerosis means "many scars." The insulation on an electric cord should not be cut into at various places, or a short circuit might result. Multiple sclerosis simply means that there are many scars in the myelin, or insulation, so that the messages from the brain are unable to get through properly to make the body work. A person's particular disabilities depend upon where the scars are, which is why everyone who has MS has different problems. Kids readily grasp this idea.

My husband said from the very onset that I should do only what I wanted to do and save my energy for family fun. Whatever I want to do, he says, "No problem, honey," and we do it.

He's packed me up five flights in temples in Japan and carried me on and off Mexican airplanes, without once hinting that being married to me was at times inconvenient. Our boys grew up sharing this attitude, and her children will, too. In return she'd better try to keep her weight down. She should also thank God it is she, not her husband, who has MS, because it would be harder for her to get him up and down stairs.

As for it being a "heavy burden" for her 13-year-old to help at home, it won't be. By the time my eldest was 8, he could go to the bank, cash a check for $100, do the grocery shopping from my list and come home with the correct change. All my sons can cook, sew, do the laundry, make beds and manage money.

At first I used to lament to myself, "Poor boys, their mother can't play baseball with them," but I soon stopped after seeing how much more self-sufficient they were than other boys. My eldest is now in his second year of college — 2,000 miles from home. Kurt had been doing the family laundry for five years! Dirk, is a super cook and baker, and Clark does the home repairs — including servicing my wheelchair. If I've made them sound like angels, they aren't, but MS has brought our family closer together. We tend to do things now rather than postponing them; because things may get worse, we're having our fun while we can. If everyone lived that way, the world would be a happier place.

Children vs. chattels

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — When he was six, Bobby wanted to live with his mom and dad. The problem was, Mom and Dad didn't want to live with each other any more.

Both of them wanted to live with Bobby, and their divorce, already messy, became downright nasty in a bitter legal battle over custody of their child.

Each began lining up psychiatrists, psychologists, social workers and other expert witnesses. Then one of the lawyers suggested a different approach — an impartial University of Wisconsin-Madison "divorce counselling" program.

The parents agreed, and went to see Dr. Jack Westman, a psychiatrist at the university who runs a program geared to helping judges decide custody battles.

"Most parents going through divorce aren't aware of how it's affecting the kids," Westman says. "The divorce decision is made in the interests of the adults, not the child. It's part of our long tradition of children being treated as chattel."

Westman says children, often bewildered by the whole divorce process, usually try to withdraw from the situation rather than be manipulated by their parents' selfish interests. "One prominent feeling is that they don't want to take sides," he said.

He said parents should realize that a child's problems, even years after the divorce, may be related to the breakup of the family. Children under age six may develop defiant attitudes, unfounded fears or regressive behavior such as bedwetting or thumbsucking. School-age children most often have academic troubles, while teenagers frequently become involved with alcohol, drugs or sex.

When Westman is called into a divorce case, usually by a lawyer or judge, he organizes a team that includes the child's court-appointed lawyer, psychiatry students and other university specialists.

"The whole thing is really counselling, trying to advise the parents and the court," Westman says. "The primary purpose is to make everyone concerned with the case more aware of the needs of children."

Spending an average of three months on each case, the team typically conducts about 20 interviews with everyone from school teachers and employers to the parents.

He says that as parents realize that the counselling team is genuinely concerned with the child, they are willing to make concessions. In about two-thirds of the cases, one parent is eventually persuaded to sacrifice custody in the interest of the child.

In cases where the parents never do agree, judges have invariably followed Westman's custody recommendations.

Even after a decision is reached, Westman stays in contact with the family.

That is what happened in Bobby's case. After the judge followed Westman's recommendation and granted custody to the father, the mother continued counselling. "The more I went, the more I understood," she says. "At the time, I was pretty tired of fighting. I was worn out, and it was affecting the way I could take care of my son."

After re-establishing her life, the mother went back to Westman to seek custody. Bobby, meanwhile, was not adjusting well to his father's second wife and her children. So, when Westman recommended that the mother be granted permanent custody four years after the divorce, the father reluctantly agreed.

"Divorce doesn't just happen the night mom or dad walks out," Westman says. "It starts well before and continues long after. Divorce is a way of life."

DIVORCE COUNSELLOR Dr. Jack Westman of the University of Wisconsin Medical School at Madison is the innovator and leader of a well-received program which meets the contempory incidence of divorce by providing impartial counselling to families going through a divorce. Under operation of the program, custody recommendations are made by Westman to divorce and family court judges according to what is best for the children rather than the parents, who often forget the individual adjustment of their offspring and work from the basis of child as chattel.

Eatery sampling served up deluxe

By PAUL MINVIELLE

If you're on a diet, avoid Barrie Lee's new book like the plague. It's simply impossible to leaf through the magnificent photographs taken at 16 Victoria and Vancouver restaurants without becoming absolutely ravenous.

Lee, who spends most of his time managing Fable Cottage Estate, is also president of Terrapin Publishing Ltd., which has already published the successful Victoria on Foot, a walking guide of the Old Town.

Vancouver and Victoria Restaurant Recipes grew out of Lee's twin interests in good food and tourism.

Somewhere along the line, Lee says the idea of a straightforward Victoria dining guide blossomed into a collection of recipes from the better restaurants in Vancouver and Victoria.

And so it was that Rob d'Estrube of Victoria and Merele Somerville in Vancouver set out to shoot Lee's selections.

Not all the restaurants Lee wanted went along with him, and once those who refused see this book they'll regret their reluctance.

In Greater Victoria, Lee lists the Butchart dining room, Deep Cove Chalet, The Empress Room, The Latch, Laurel Point Inn Dining Room, Oak Bay Marina, Parrot House and The Raven's.

Barrie Lee . . . a warning to droolers

A favorite entry will probaly be The Latch. The listed Sidney restaurasnt entry features Consomme au Sherry "en croute," Half Lobster Bonaparte, Sweetbreads "La Fayette," Lime Sherbet with Champagne, Tournedos Couperin, Parissiene Potatoes and Tomatoes Forestiere, Cauliflower Paysan and Peach Pernod Sabayon.

If you value the book, hold it away from you as you look at the pictures to avoid drool marks.

Each entry has a description of the restaurant, a full-page picture of a table spread with specialties of the house, followed by recipes for the specialties.

Despite being a bit pricey ($5.95) for a 64-page-plus-softcover book, and despite the odd noncritical misspelling (nothing serious except to a nitpicker) the new offering will probably be a best seller with any tourist who happens to have dined in any one of the restaurants. It's a hard-to-beat souvenir if you want to show your Aunt Gertrude where you ate in British Columbia.

Victorians and Vancouverites might also want to send it to friends around the world.

Lee is gambling that the slick full-color presentation will be a success. With this book the 35-year-old publisher deserves to win.

Soviet operation is a boon to myopic

By DR. L. L. COLEMAN

I am severely nearsighted. I have been told that there is a new operation that is being done in Russia that corrects nearsightedness. Is this operation recognized yet here?

D.M.

Dear D.M.:

"Myopia" is the technical term for nearsightedness. People with myopia have difficulty seeing objects at a distance. Without getting involved in the technical aspects of myopia, it is sufficient to say that the curvature of the cornea of the eye determines the degree of myopia.

It is a false belief that the progression of myopia is affected by how much one uses the eyes or whether or not one wears glasses all the time.

In most instances, myopia can be corrected by glasses or by contact lenses. For those with severe myopia, an operation known as "radial keratotomy" was first performed in Russia about 10 years ago. This surgery is performed under a microscope. The object of the surgery is to flatten the curvature of the cornea and thus modify the severe myopia, or nearsightedness.

The surgery is now being performed in selected cases in most eye departments of major hospitals all over North America. The advantages and disadvantages are evaluated for each person before embarking on the operation.

The initial results of keratotomy have stimulated a great deal of enthusiasm. Since its origin, some modifications have been made. The horizons in ophthalmic surgery for myopia — as well as other eye conditions — are being expanded daily, bringing vast hope to those who are afflicted with this and other visual impairments.

Dear Doctor:

My baby was born two weeks after it was due. She is in perfect health. Every once in a while I worry that a "late" child can sometimes have problems later on.

E.W.

Dear E.W.:

The fact that your baby is in good health now should give you the assurance that once and for all eradicates your fear and anxiety. I am certain that your doctor has given you this reassurance.

A very elaborate study was performed in more than 12,000 infants who were born after they were due. It was found that there were no more abnormalities in this large group than among those children who were born on schedule.

The obvious finding was that the average birth weight of the child is slightly greater than others.

Doctors warn of home booby traps

By MARLENE ORTON

OTTAWA (CP) — Doctors who have to count the dead children and patch up the maimed and poisoned, has warned parents to pay attention to their booby-trapped households.

Dr. Norman Eade of the poison centre at the Montreal Children's Hospital repeated warnings heard many times before about keeping dangerous household products away from children.

"Never mind the so-called safety caps. Lock them away!"

Dr. Eade told members of the Canadian Pedtriatic Society of a young lad whose life was spared but who lost his vision in one eye.

"And he never even got the cap off!"

The child had sucked around the plastic cap of a well-known crystal drain cleaner on which a crust of the deadly chemical, lye, had formed.

"Then he rubbed his eye with a finger that had some of the lye on it."

Dr. James Ross of Halifax described youngsters who were burned and maimed after chomping on live electrical wires, playing with firecrackers and pulling pots and kettles filled with boiling fluids from counters and stoves.

Dr. Herb Simpson of the Traffic Injury Research Foundation of Canada told of a recent Ottawa study of bicycle accidents in which most of the children were injured because their bikes were too big.

Back on the subject of drain cleaners, Dr. Eade said the liquid products are even more dangerous and should be banned because if the containers are opened the liquid can be chugged down too easily by curious youngsters.

"If people have to have lye around the house, there is only one place to have it and that's under lock and key."

Dr. Ross, a plastic surgeon at Halifax's Victoria General Hospital offered a more shocking portrait of parental neglect with screen-size photos of the children he's patched up in recent years.

Five-year-old Susan, left under the care of her 10-year-old sister when a house fire broke out, now is the only surviving daughter.

Her parents, said Dr. Ross, were at a nearby tavern when the disaster occurred.

Susan suffered burns to 75 per cent of her body. After 366 days in the hospital at $200 a day and 15 operations, Susan is alive. But she wears a wig, has a prosthetic (false) nose, is covered with scars and will be deformed for the rest of her life.

Children should not be left alone without a mature babysitter who can cope with an evacuation if a fire breaks out, Ross said.

A look at the 500 patients admitted to the burn centre at Halifax's children's hospital over the last eight years shows 38 per cent are hurt by hot fluids, mostly tea and coffee.

Commonly, an adult will pick up a child with one arm while carrying a hot cup of coffee or a container with hot liquids in the other hand.

He cited numerous potentially lethal weapons around the house which could be disarmed with some common sense.

Among these:

—Plastic covers for outlets to hinder tiny wandering fingers;

—Shortened electric kettle cords since most tend to dangle to the floor, inviting a tug or two from curious tots; and —Teaching children about the danger of matches and firecrackers.

Meantime, Dr. Simpson of the traffic research foundation described characteristics common to 335 bicycle collisions studied during a 10-week period in Ottawa last year. Researchers looked at the time and location of the accidents, collision circumstances, riding experience, bike characteristics and other factors.

Seventy per cent of the collisions involved youths who simply fell of their bicycles and most had been riding for several years.

"That rather surprised us because we would rather have expected bicycle-car accidents," Dr. Simpson said in an interview.

"The bike was usually a standard coaster and, although the child typically had been riding bicycles for several years, it was often his first on the collision-involved bike."

In one-quarter of the cases, the bike was too big for the youth.

"Too frequently, parents continue to equip their children with bikes that are too large," he said. "A bike should be fitted properly so the child can comfortably reach the ground with both feet while seated."

Something to shout about

SPIVEY'S CORNER, N.C. (AP) — A 30-year-old farm worker from Tennessee blasted about 12,000 pairs of eardrums with what he called mountain hollerin' to win the 12th annual U.S. National Hollerin' contest.

As a record crowd of more than 12,000 cheered the hollerers, Dennis Hammons of Cosby, Tenn., who listed his name as Treetop Lemon, became the youngest person ever to win the event at Midway High School in Spivey's Corner.

Dear Dr. Levine:

I am a 15-year-old female with a lot of friends. The problem is, I am very paranoid. Every time I meet someone or go somewhere with friends, I always think they don't want me around and are always talking about me. This is getting to the point where I hate to go anywhere or meet anyone because I think they are talking behind my back.

Most of the people I know say I am nice and attractive, but I can't help thinking that, later, they'll be saying how they don't like me around.

Answer: The word "paranoid" is a technical psychiatric term that refers to a serious personality disorder. You should be less ominous in your view of yourself.

You are obviously self-critical, and sensitive to the opinions of others. In spite of this, you are well liked, popular and have many friends. Isn't there something here that doesn't quite match?

You do have questions, seemingly, about your own self-worth. It might help to speak to a counsellor at a teen drop-in centre or an adolescent clinic about why you have such low self-esteem.

Dear Dr. Cotter:

I am 16. My friend, who is 17, is very religious. I recently went to church with him for the first time and I noticed that the church really stressed the idea that the world is in its last days and it may blow up any time now; and the pastor kept repeating that unless we are total Christians and never sin, we are going straight to hell.

My friend is scared. His family makes him go to church, and every time he goes he gets more depressed. He has nightmares about this now. He says he will go to a psychiatrist.

Answer: It's his family and church who need the psychiatrist; your friend needs someone who will tell him what the Christian gospel really is.

The real question is, what is God's message? What your friend is told — that we must avoid sin in order to win eternal life — is directly contrary to the Christian gospel. Christian teaching is that there is nothing we can do to save ourselves, but that God freely gives us freedom from our sins.

Dear Mr. Vichert:

I'm a 15-year-old girl and my family just moved to a different part of the city. I just can't think of anything to say to other kids when I'm with them. Sure, I can talk about a recent test or something like that, but pretty soon you run out of tests or homework to talk about. So I just sit there, and everyone decides I'm boring.

Answer: Many people share your difficulties of trying to develop friendships in a new neighborhood. It takes some time, so don't give up if it seems to be going slowly.

Young readers' questions on human relations and sex are answered by a panel including Marion Powell, physician; Graham Cotter, clergyman; Dr. Saul Levine, psychiatrist, and social worker Bruce Vichert.

Send questions to Youth Clinic, The Victoria Times, 2621 Douglas St., Victoria V8W 2N4. Readers wishing to talk with someone about their problems can call NEED at 386-6323.

You instinctively are on guard, following disappointments and disillusionment in connection with individuals who had won your confidence and affection. Social life, opportunities for happiness accelerate in August. Pisces, Virgo natives play important roles in your life. You sense when something of significance is to occur — you are better at aiding others than when it comes to promoting your own interests. Smile could end lines around lips looking great

By RENA PAUL

Dear Rena:

How do other women keep their lipstick from spreading out into those little lines around the mouth? I hate fuzzy looking lips but don't know how to cope with the problem. Can you help me?

Martha C.

Dear Martha:

Perhaps you are a smoker. This would account for the formation of tiny crevices around the mouth, or it may be hereditary in your case. Whatever the cause, I can apreciate your desire to minimize their appearance. To contain your lip coloring more effectively, try a light dusting of face powder over the lips and around them. Then outline the mouth with a dry lip pencil (rather than a creamy or oily one), and this must match your lipstick. Finally, apply with tissue. You'll still need a touch up during a long day, but this should give you a cleaner outline for prolonged periods. Paler lip colors are less evident when they "crawl", so avoid the deeper or vivid shades.

And remember, these lines disappear when you smile, so put on a happy face.

Dear Rena:

My mother tells me you will settle an argument for us. Men seem to give Bikinis a lot of attention but my mother says they're "old hat". I don't want to be ignored on the beach, if other girls continues to show more skin. The trouble is, once you tan in a one-piece, you can't expose in a Bikini or you're two-toned. What's the answer?

Salome N.

Dear Salome:

I find it amusing that you should have this problem. Your famous namesake had no dilemma about exposing her skin. But seriously, my advice to you is, try to get a gradual allover tan in the privacy of your yard or balcony, OR simply apply an instant tan preparation to the paler areas, when you want a uniform skin tone. Your mother is right. The Bikini is dated! The new look is the sleek little tant suit with plunging back, or a smooth maillot sheath suit. These shape the torso and outline it beautifully. Don't worry, you'll be noticed!

Dear Rena:

My eyebrows are coarse and heavy like a boy's but when I pluck them I get blemishes. So it's either shaggy brows or zitts for me. What can I do to shape them?

Ann H.

Dear Ann:

If this sensitivity to tweezing persists, see a good dermatologist.If the condition seems superficial, try applying a little alcohol with a cotton ball, to the area you are about to work on. The surrounding skin and hair must be free of all bacteria. When you tweeze, be careful to remove the hair in the direction of its growth . . . never back on it (and sterilize tweezers before using!). When you've cleared the unwanted hairs, use a sterile swab to apply calomine or any good antiseptic lotion. Stay out of the sun awhile, and keep the area clean. If you still break out, don't fail to consult a dermatologist.

Wayne Duggins has designs on your feet

By RON ALEXANDER
New York Times

"When they discover what I do for a living, the initial unspoken reaction of people at cocktail parties is 'Good God, I really don't want to talk to you,' " Wayne Duggins said with a smile as he toyed with a pair of camel-colored sweat socks.

What Duggins, who was a history major in college, does for a living is design socks. As head stylist for Burlington Socks, one of the largest manufacturers of socks in North America, he designs several hundred pairs of socks a year. About 60 percent of his designs are worn by men, the rest by women.

"Socks are only an accessory, so I can't start fashion trends, but I follow them and my designs fill needs," Duggins explained during a recent visit to New York from the Burlington Socks plant in Asheboro, N.C.

Does a designer of socks envy the designers of clothing whose initials are embossed on the buttons of their creations?

The answer from Duggins is a loud no. "More guys wear what I design," he said, "than those kind of clothes."

Duggins, who is 37 years old and silver-haired, joined Burlington Socks 15 years ago. He designed packages before stepping into the styling department; he has been chief sock stylist since 1976.

As far as men are concerned, solid color ribbed dress socks of stretch nylon are Burlington's biggest sellers. (The total number of men's socks produced in the United States last year was close to 669 million). The anklet outsells both the mid-length and over-the-calf styles (popular in the Northeast) and black is still the No. 1 color, Duggins says, but navy, he adds happily, "is coming up there." Brown follows in third place.

Except for a variation in rib width, a change of yarn or a difference in shading (Duggins checks with, among others, fabric houses, apparel manufacturers and the Color Association of America to keep track of trends), dress socks don't exactly offer a designer rampant opportunity for creativity.

He is understandably gratified, then, that "the excitement in men's hosiery today is in the sport socks and casual socks categories." A more leisurely lifestyle, as well as the popularity of such exposed-socks sports as tennis, soccer, jogging and roller skating have contributed to this excitement.

Duggins's casual sport socks are designed in close to four dozen shades White and off-white are still the biggest sellers, though, with a range of blues hot on their heels. Purples and pinks have, so far, struck out.

FALL LINE of Toronto designer Sybil Casey was presented to some 200 Victoria area residents who turned out Saturday see both the designer and her fashions in two shows presented by Shanelle in Trounce Alley. Refreshments were served and patrons were free to chat with Casey and feel the fabrics of her creations. Local models made up the show, photographed by Seyd Safavi and held both inside the store and in the alley. " Sybil was extremely smitten by the West Coast and its people," said her spokesman, Nan Miller. "There was a lot of interested response to her visit.

Sewing pays off

PORT STANLEY, Ont. (CP) — Sewing was Mellanie Stephens' recreation as a child growing up in this Lake Erie shoreline community.

Now she has turned her recreation into a booming business employing sewers to produce canvas bags and clothes for her cottage industry.

"I didn't know the difference between wholesale and retail," she said in the two-storey barnboard and batten building which serves as her home, shop and production centre for the Kettle Creek Canvas Co. she started last year.

Then, her modest inventory sold in two days. Now she predicts she'll soon be doing a $40,000-a-month retail business.

Despite the heady success of her enterprise, Stephens clearly remembers her humble start sewing bed comforters in an apartment in nearby St. Thomas, where she lived for a while before moving back to her native Port Stanley.

Pleasure sailors liked her handiwork and brought sails to be repaired and bags and cushions to be sewn.

"I moved into my new premises in Febraury (1979). It was supposed to be just a canvas bag company, but I threw clothes in and opened up in May.

"I sold out in two days. I was sewing madly, I had eight batches of orders, so I figured it was about time I hired people."

Six months later, she had two full-time employees and between 10 and 20 cottage-industry sewers working in their own homes.

"I emerged in September," she said. "It (the business) had taken off. I was amazed."

She's learning to adjust to the role of employer.

"Things seem to get slicker, more efficient," she said, recounting the earlier months of chaos and disorganization.

Blind faith in government was his undoing

VANCOUVER (CP) — Brad Hope has spent close to $60,000 and four years of unpaid labor on his family dream — now it is being threatened by an apparent blind faith in government.

Last week — nearly a year after he first sought financial help — the Royal Bank of Canada told Hope that despite a provincial government guarantee, it ould not lend him $55,000 for his fledgling salmon-spawning farm on tiny Nelson Island off the Sunshine Coast.

Hope is perplexed and disillusioned by the discouraging turn of events in that time, but he says he's sure of one thing: "I've been totally shafted by the provincial government."

Four years ago, acting on a boyhood fascination with aquariums, Hope packed up his family and moved to 40 acres of land at Hidden Basin on Nelson Island — a ready-made site for a marine farm.

After acquiring the necessary licences, Hope made his first approach to the provincial government in August, 1979, for information on financing needed for feed, electricty, laboratory equipment and construction of seapens and a pipeline to bring in freshwater from a nearby lake.

Agriculture ministry officials said it appeared he'd be eligible, and on that basis he went ahead and purchased 63,000 eggs. Another 20,000 were purchased in January with only minimal hatching losses.

Hope said he talked to Mike Thompson, head of the agriculture credit branch, several times in January and February to see how the application was coming.

"I asked him if I should submit the loan application to the bank, but he told me to wait because it appeared some changes in marine resources responsibility might result in us getting some direct financing," he said.

Hope says he was given the run-around in later phone calls, so on April 3 — without the ministry's knowlege — submitted the loan application to the bank "because we were getting worried."

On April 25 — unable to wait any longer for money to construct facilities — he was forced to move 40,000 maturing fish to an untested pond. On June 6, they died after a mysterious hydrogen sulphide gas formed on the water.

In the meantime, Thompson told him it could be a year before the agriculture ministry assumed responsibility for the relatively-new aqua-culture industry from the environment ministry, and that he should submit his application to the bank.

Last Friday, the bank — which Hope says also had trouble getting information from the ministry — rejected the loan application, saying the venture was too risky.

"If we had been given some answers six or eight weeks ago and they (the ministry) had told us that we had better come up with some alternatives, we could have done that," Hope said. "We really thought by starting in August we could have had it (the money.)"

"It's unbelievable that this can happen. We're coming into a new industry and can't even get a decent response from them. All they've done is string us along . . . that's an injustice that we shouldn't have to stand for.

"The bank manager said he might be able to come out and have a look at the operation in a couple of weeks — I said 'fine, I'll show you the dead fish."

Rollie Brett of the Pacific Biological Station in Nanaimo said Hope's operation is biologically sound and "he has as much chance as anybody of succeeding, but I can understand the bank's position."

"This is basically a new industry and the bank just doesn't have enough information and statistics to go on."

Hope said Monday that a couple of other banks he's approached have been receptive. However, if he can't get a loan in the next two weeks, he'll either have to seek private investors and lose controlling interest or sell the operation — neither of which he finds attractive.

"My wife and my son and I have worked too hard on this to lose it all," he said. "There's no reason for that . . . we've demonstrated we can raise fish.

Union's employees picket

OTTAWA (CP) — More than 50 employees of the Public Service Alliance of Canada, a union which represents 180,000 public servants, set up a picket line outside the alliance's office here Monday to back contract demands.

The alliance's bargaining, education, public relations and staff officers, who want improved wages and benefits in a new contract, say the alliance's management is refusing to participate in serious negotiations.

The workers, represented by the Alliance Employees Union, want a 12-per-cent raise and overtime pay for every hour worked in excess of 35 per week.

They also want to end the alliance's policy of paying them salaries equivalent to what they would earn for comparable work in the public service, arguing that their opportunities for advancement are much less.

However, alliance vice-president Aileen Manion said the workers now earn an average of $27,000 per year and do not need such a large raise. They also have better benefits in some cases than the public servants for whom the alliance bargains with the government, she added.

The workers were expected to be back on the job today but spokesman Dave Dunn said they plan further protest actions. Talks with the alliance were expected to resume today.

. . . as union votes to strike

OTTAWA (UPC) — Eighty-five percent of the federal government's 1,200 translators and interpreters have voted to strike in early July if the treasury board fails to meet their contract demands.

A strike by the translators would "paralyze" the provision of services in both official languages to the people of Canada, said Henri Frickx, a spokesman for the Canadian Union of Professional and Technical Employees.

"It goes without saying that it is the employees of the translation bureau who give the federal government its bilingual image at home and abroad," he said Monday.

The translators will not act until a conciliation board report, expected July 4, is published, Frickx said.

The report was due last January but the conciliation board has asked for and received four extensions to give it time needed to prepare its findings. Frickx said those extensions were due mainly to administrative problems encountered by board members.

The union is seeking an across-the-board salary increase of 20 percent, four weeks annual vacation after five years service and paid maternity leave in a one-year contract. Their last contract expired in March, 1979.

"Because of the government's guidelines which were in place when we signed our last contract, we were limited only to a 6 percent salary increase in 1978," Frickx said.

About 80 percent of the translators' work lies in translating departmental reports and studies from English to French. Also involved are the translators who are assigned to the daily House of Commons debates.

The average annual salary for a federal translator is $22,000.

$10M fraud charged

TORONTO (CP) — The preliminary hearing of two men charged with defrauding the Cuban government of $10.3 million by selling it 3,000 tonnes of non-existent coffee began here Monday.

Crown Attorney Anne MacDonald said Karl Fessler of West Germany and Gilbert Lee McDonald of Miami used forged documents to swindle the Cuban state bank, the Bank of Nova Scotia and several other companies.

SET OF 2 DIRECTORS CHAIRS
(3 sets to be won)

HOW TO PLAY

Locked inside the "SUMMERFUNTHING" safe are many valuable prizes. Some of those prizes could be yours if you find the correct PASSWORD that opens the combination lock. It's an exciting game that's fun and easy to enter. The instructions on the dial give you the position of the letters in the "SUMMERFUNTHING" PASSWORD. All you have to do is find the first letter to start. For instance, suppose you started at the letter E and the instructions read 2nd LETTER-FOUR COUNTER CLOCKWISE. Count four spaces in a counter-clockwise direction from the letter E and you arrive at the letter A. The next instruction reads 3rd LETTER-EIGHT COUNTER CLOCKWISE, so count off eight spaces in a counter-clockwise direction from the letter A and you arrive at the letter S. Finally the 4th letter. SIX CLOCKWISE means you count in a clockwise direction from the letter S and you arrive at the letter Y. In this example, the PASSWORD is the word E-A-S-Y. To give you another clue and to add to the interest, each day's password is scrambled and you will find it at the bottom of the illustration.

GAME RULES

1. Winners will be chosen by random drawing from all valid entries. All winners must answer a skill testing question.
2. Winners from the previous week will be published in the Saturday Times and Sunday Colonist.

4. The SUMMERFUNTHING judges will have the final decision on any interpretation of Game rules.
5. As a condition of receiving prizes, recipients agree to allow publication of their names and pictures in the Colonist or Times for no additional consideration. Submission of an entry indicates acceptance of all rules. No prize substitutions.
6. The contest is open to all readers of the Daily Colonist and Victoria Times on Vancouver Island and the Gulf Islands. Employees of Victoria Press and their immediate families are not eligible to enter.

Common-law property split studied

OTTAWA (CP) — The Supreme Court of Canada reserved judgment Monday on whether it can impose a trust on property unwed couples accumulate during their relationships.

The request from Rosa Becker of Hawkesbury, Ont., is the first to come before the Supreme Court of Canada and involves three farms used for bee-keeping that the couple purchased during their 20 years of living together.

Miss Becker was awarded at trial 40 beehives from Lothar Pettkus and $1,500. The Ontario Court of Appeal varied the judgment, imposing a constructive trust and awarding Miss Becker a one-half interest in the farms.

Lawyer Barry Swadron, appearing for Pettkus, said there had never been any agreement that the two would share in the farms. Pettkus had his own bank account, all of the property was in his name only and the evidence was that Miss Becker herself didn't expect any property, he argued.

The two immigrated to Canada in 1935 and shortly afterwards bean sharing an apartment rented by Miss Becker. Evidence was that she paid most of the expenses while he saved enough money to buy the first farm.

The evidence also showed she took an active part in the bee-keeping business and herself dug a trench for their septic tank.

They parted briefly in 1973 after a falling-out and the court was told that Pettkus "literally threw" $3,000 at Miss Becker. She also took an old car.

She returned a few months later with $1,900 remaining. They parted permanently in 1974.

Ontario's Family Law Reform Act of 1978 recognizes the right of a married spouse to share in property built up during a marriage. It also gives a right to unwed partners to obtain maintenance.

Pettkus's lawyer said the courts should not intrude in areas where Parliament or provincial legislatures have acted, such as Ontario in the present appeal.

He also said that the courts should not impose a trust on any family where there is no legal document on which to base it.

Sidney Lederman, appearing for Miss Becker, said there was evidence that Pettkus was enriched unjustly at the expense of the work and money put into the business by his client.

He said the business could be viewed as a joint venture and Miss Becker was entitled to a fair share.

Mr. Justice Roland Martland asked what the case would be if a employer was enriched unjustly by paying poor wages to an employee. He wondered if the lawyer would argue that the employee was entitled to a property settlement?

The lawyer for Pettkus said the appeal was similar to the Murdock case in which the court ruled against a wife who had worked building up a ranch in Alberta.

Spain blew it — Greenpeace

OTTAWA (CP) — Greenpeace Foundation director Patrick Moore of Vancouver said Monday Spanish authorities played right into his organization's hands by seizing its ship Rainbow Warrior off the Spanish coast last week.

"I was surprised the Spanish were so foolish to seize us in international waters," Moore, whose organization opposes the killing of whales, said in an interview.

The vessel was seized last Wednesday for interfering with whalers off the Spanish coast. Some reports said it was in international water at the time while others say it was within Spanish territory.

Moore, here to attend a conference of the Canadian Wildlife Federation, said the seizure received front-page coverage in the Spanish press, bringing his organization's arguments to public attention.

Bestselling writers live near Hollywood

scott's world
by vernon scott

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — There are a handful of novelists in the country who, like movie stars, are instant box office. Their books are guaranteed best-sellers before they are published.

Whether it is simply a freak geographical happenstance or a weird symbiosis of the creative arts, most such authors live within a paperback throw of Hollywood.

These superstar authors include Sidney Sheldon, Irving Wallace, Harold Robbins, Judith Krantz and Joseph Wambaugh, Southern Californians all.

Maybe its the sunshine, swimming pools and proximity to all movie-TV glamor that inspires this colony of novelists, all of whom know one another and who socialize at various Hollywood parties.

More importantly, all of them sell books in the millions of copies. They also belong to an exclusive literary club — multi-millionaire writers.

Were this collection of literary lights residents of, say, Darien, Conn., they would doubtless be acclaimed a congress of genius by eastern publishers and critics and lionized by New York social arbiters.

As it is, the west coast contingent is largely dismissed as commercial hacks, given short shrift by the high brow establishment.

This is not to say that all superstar authors live in Southern California. Perhaps less prolific but still superstar are Arthur Hailey, Robert Ludlum and James Michener who are east coasters.

Sheldon, whose newest book, Rage of Angels, is already off and running as a best-seller with a record-setting 350,000-copy first hard-cover printing, is amused by the denigrating attitude of New York's literari.

"When I wrote my first novel, The Naked Face, it was almost universally hailed by the critics," he said, grinning. "The New York Times said it was 'the best first mystery novel of the year.'

"But it didn't sell very well. After I wrote The Other Side of Midnight — my first best-seller, the Times never again mentioned me favorably.

"I think novelists who earn incredible amounts of money, no matter the literary quality of their work, create instant antipathy in the hearts of a large segment of the establishment. It's ridiculous."

Sheldon, a tall, imposing man with silver hair and an outgoing disposition, began writing novels after his 50th birthday. He had established himself as a Broadway playwright, movie screen writer and television producers.

Because he was already financially independent, Sheldon's decision to become a novelist was not an economic decision. At that time there were few if any instant millionaires among fiction writers.

"It was jut before the Hollywood-type star system came to books," Sheldon said.

"Now super authors can earn $5 million per book, which was unheard of ten years ago. Even so, the average published novelist in 1979 earned only $3,500,

Opening lead — queen of diamonds.

Declarer does best in the long run to stick religiously to percentages. He will sometimes be confronted with more than one line of play, and then he should follow the sensible course of playing according to the probabilities.

Occasionally the right play will turn out wrong, and the wrong play will turn out right. But if declarer wants to do well over the long haul, he will surely do better making right plays than wrong plays.

Take this case. West leads the queen of diamonds, which holds, and continues with a diamond. East cashes the A-K and shifts to a trump. How should declarer play the hand?

Having lost the first three tricks, South must decide whether to attempt a spade finesse or a club finesse. Each has an even chance of winning, and it might seem natural to settle the matter by mentally tossing a coin. But actually there is a clear-cut percentage play and the situation is not simply a matter of chance.

The best procedure is to win the trump with the nine, play a spade to the ace, and ruff a spade. Then, after leading a trump to the jack, ruff the ten of spades. As it happens, the king falls on the ten and declarer makes four hearts without courting the danger of a finesse.

If South stakes the outcome on a finesse in either black suit, he has only a 50 per cent chance. But if he tries to drop the king of spades by ruffing one or two rounds of the suit, he increases his chances considerably, and at the same time preserves his 50 per cent chance of winning the remaining finesse if the spade king does not fall.

The Lord is my Shepherd

I shall not want.

He maketh me to lie down in green pastures

He restoreth my soul

He leadeth me in the path of righteousness for his name sake

Yea though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death

I will fear no evil

For thou art with me, thy rod and thy staff
they comfort me

before me in the
enemies

Thou anointest my head with oil

My cup runneth over

Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life and I will dwell in the House of the Lord forever.

Police spy raises fears for S. Africa students

OTTAWA (CP) — Some South Africans are still in danger of being "rounded up or picked off" because a spy infiltrated the anti-apartheid International University Exchange Fund, says an international commission which investigated the incident.

In its report, released Monday in Ottawa by chairman David MacDonald, secretary of state in the former Progressive Conservative government, the three-man commission says it might take some time for South African security police to evaluate all the information provided by its agent, Craig Williamson.

But there is a serious possibility that South African students who received scholarships from the organization or activists working for anti-apartheid groups it supported could be incriminated by his work and arrested.

The commission's investigation confirms the worst fears of the Geneva-based organization, which received its report late last week.

"The unfortunate fact is that little can probably be done to protect or otherwise assist those on whom Williamson has incriminating (in South African eyes) documents or information."

The organization was established in 1961 primarily to grant scholarships to students living in countries considered to have repressive regimes so they could study at home or abroad.

The report says only a few persons appear to have fallen victim to his spying so far. Several persons connected with the fund have been arrested in South Africa.

Rioting eases

JOHANNESBURG, (UPI) — Major foreign-owned automobile and allied factories in the Eastern Cape industrial complex Monday postponed threatened firings of about 10,000 striking black workers, easing tension in the area's black ghettos.

Witnesses said police, some with dogs, shepherded thousands of black workers to and from the gates of about 14 factories affected by total or partial work stoppages in support of higher wage demands.

They said police ensured the laborers left factory premises in groups of 10 or less, in line with recent Riotous Assemblies Act legislation prohibiting gatherings of more than 10. The action also appeared to prevent the workers from forming protest marches. No incidents were reported.

Though workers were threatened with dismissal if they were not back at their jobs Monday, spokesmen for the affected auto, leather, steel and rubber companies said the deadline had been extended with talks planned for Tuesday.

Prime Minister Pieter Botha said on national television Sunday night his government was prepared "to use its might" to end outbreaks of unrest.

Big day? Plant a tree

As part of its 75th birthday celebration, the United States Forest Service is mounting a campaign to encourage Americans to plant trees. Together with the American Association of Nurserymen, they are aiming for a goal of 75 million more trees planted in 1980 than were planted in 1979.

Environmental concern is the major reason for the project. These groups wish to call to the public's attention the need for more trees to improve the quality of their surroundings and this is an honorable objective for our own country as well.

A description of this project south of the border came to my desk just recently and I was particularly struck by one paragraph in which the amazing benefits of trees to humans are described.

"... trees not only beautify our lives, but are important to our very survival. Trees filter harmful pollutants from the air, making it cleaner, fresher. They change wind patterns around our homes, saving heating energy in winter, and provide shade and insulation against the sun in summer. Trees can muffle noise, reducing its nerve-wracking effect up to 50 per cent. They can attract wildlife if that is wanted, or serve as living fences. They prevent soil erosion, provide food and fragrance, remove carbon dioxide and give oxygen. They are one of nature's most remarkable inventions."

Doesn't that make you want to rush out to plant trees all round your home? One way to make the planting of a tree very meaningful is to plant on special occasions. For example, a small business might gather its staff to plant a tree on its anniversary. The planting could possibly take place along a city street, in a park, at a school, in front of a city business.

And at home, many are the occasions a tree or shrub planting could commemorate. In fact, this whole project brought to mind a suggestion made at a recent workshop I attended. The idea was put forth that a family could select and plant a special tree that would be the Family Tree. It would be planted in a prominent spot in the yard and would receive special care from all family members — watering, feeding, pruning. As the family grew, so would the tree, as a symbol of the growth, shaping and changing of the nature of the family itself.

By the planting of a tree or shrub on the occasion of a birthday, wedding, anniversary, graduation, acquisition of a new home, reunion or promotion, these events can all be especially celebrated and remembered.

Given a little thought and imagination, appropriate plantings can be found for each occasion. For instance, a Bridal Wreath spirea, with its dainty double white flowers like little rosettes all along its branches, would be an ideal wedding or anniversary plant. So would a Mock Orange (Philadelphus).

Birthdays, Mothers' and Fathers' Days and so on can be celebrated with a gift plant that can be enjoyed in the same home for a while, then set out in the garden. Pot hydrangeas, azaleas and chrysanthemums are good bets here. This past Mothers' Day, my husband became very adventurous and gifted me with a magnificent gardenia, for which I have chosen a likely spot in a warm, protected part of the garden.

For special personal occasions any family member could be presented with a special planting suited to them. How about a lush bed of shamrock (Oxalis) for a Patrick or a Sean in the family? Oxalis come in varieties suitable for both sun and shade.

The hardy rose Therese Bugnet would be a fine gift plant for a Theresa in the family, especially if she were named after the French Saint Theresa de Lisiex. Another lovely pink rose called Sonia is available.

The children may like to choose trees as their very own. Our Theresa insisted that she have charge of our two cherry trees, so they were planted in front of the site of her future garden playhouse. She also has in her domain the globe artichoke plants, since she devours them with the greatest abandon of all of us.

Japan's PM a toss-up

TOKYO (AP) — Wasting little time on celebrations for their resounding election victory, Liberal Democratic party leaders met today to continue bargaining over who will succeed the late Prime Minister Masayoshi Ohira.

Despite months of feuding among its various factions, the party pulled itself together long enough to take 286 of 511 seats in Japan's lower house of parliament.

That ensures up to four more years of running the government the LDP has controlled for almost three decades. The party also won a comfortable margin in the less important upper house, with 135 of 252 seats.

Top party officials went to Ohira's private residence to report the results of the election at an altar where the late prime minister's ashes are being kept. Ohira died of a heart attack June 12. Chief Cabinet Secretary Masayoshi Ito became acting prime minister.

The leaders then met to discuss how they can avoid a fierce fight over the prime ministership. The LDP is a loose coalition of pro-Western, pro-business conservative factions, and leaders of at least three of those groups are considered major candidates for the post.

The bargaining was complicated by the defeat of acting LDP President Eiichi Nishimura in Sunday's election — the only major LDP official to lose.

Some party members had been pushing for the 82-year-old Nishimura to remain party president until regular party elections in December, with the prime ministership split off and given to a provisional leader until then. With his defeat, the likelihood of that compromise decreased.

Bitter air at talks

PANMUNJOM (UPI) — North and South Korea met for reunification talks today on the eve of the 30th anniversary of the Korean War, with the Communist North chiding the South over the bloody riots in Kwangju.

The talks, noticeably bitter, were held three days after an air and naval battle in which South Korean forces sank what defense officials called a northern spy boat and killed its nine crewmen.

For the first time since the talks began in February to arrange a meeting between the prime ministers of the two Koreas, the session was open to the press and the stinging verbal attacks exchanged by the negotiators were broadcast through loudspeakers.

West leaves summit united

Times News Services

VENICE — The importance of the summit meeting of leaders of the Western world's seven most industrialized countries in the Western world was not to be found in black and white of their final statement.

It was found rather in the portrait of unity the seven represented — a strong signal to the Russians that the Western alliance roundly condemned and would solidly support one another in the face of Russia's invasion of Afghanistan.

At a press conference following the summit, Prime Minister Trudeau admitted that prior to the talks, the alliance had shown a certain measure of disunity and a certain dissarray, which could only be helpful to the Soviet bloc.

He went on to say, that although economic summits of the past had not been matched in the political field, the seven leaders spent a good deal of their time discussing world stability and the various geographical areas where tensions exist.

He said he is "cautiously optimistic" about the results, adding that the mood at the two-day meeting showed "we can cope with our problems, but not with wild enthusiasm or great self-congratulation."

The summit on the heavily guarded island of San Giorgio ended with the seven heads of state of U.S., Germany, France, Britain, Canada, Japan and Italy each making a five-minute address in which they summed up the key points of the conference.

President Carter, whose questionable foreign policy decisions during the run-up to the American elections has been at the heart of Europe's disenchantment with American leadership, spoke out forcefully on the Russian-Afghan crisis.

Since Canada was the only one of the seven countries at the summit which has not gone to world prices for oil, Trudeau was questioned on whether or not he came under pressure to change the Liberal oil policy which helped him to regain power in the last election.

Of course we want to keep in mind the world prices, said Trudeau. But unlike Mr. Clark, who at the Tokyo summit committed his government to tie Canadian oil to world prices, we don't want it to be tied.

Trudeau said the conference had condemned the recent OPEC oil increases. "Now why should we condemn them and still be expected to go to them? The price rises are unjustifiable and unforgiveable and we will not be servilely bound to them."

Trudeau, who established formal diplomatic ties with the Vatican 11 years ago, flew to Rome today, where he watched as his eldest son received a benediction from Pope John Paul II. He conferred with Italian Prime Minister Francesco Cossiga before going to the Vatican.

Soviets seek arms buildup

MOSCOW (Reuter) — The Soviet Union's Communist leaders called Monday for a buildup of the country's armed forces and the East bloc Warsaw pact alliance to counter what they called Western plans to achieve military superiority.

A document approved by a one-day session of the party's policy-setting central committee said "all-round strengthening of the defence potential of our state" is necessary in the present world situation.

The document, effectively a program statement of foreign and defence policy over the coming months, expressed approval of the dispatch of Soviet troops to Afghanistan.

Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev Monday reaffirmed Soviet support for the Afghan regime and said the defeat of large rebel units had made possible the withdrawal of some Soviet troops.

Brezhnev, in a report to the central committee, defended the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, saying the Soviet Union had no alternative but to send in troops.

A source in the Kremlin, meanwhile, said Soviet leaders are "shocked, even stunned" by the skeptical reaction of Western leaders to the limited troop withdrawal from Afghanistan.

"They were extremely disappointed," he said.

The source said his conversations Monday with leading Kremlin officials convinced him the Soviets intended their withdrawal to be taken by the West as a basis for negotiations on settling the Afghanistan issue.

"I don't know what the next Soviet reaction might be," the source said. "They will really have to go back to square one."

President Carter and leaders of six other industrialized nations meeting in Venice, Italy coolly dismissed the pull-out of 10,000 Soviet troops and 108 tanks as an inadequate show of Soviet good will.

Meanwhile, Canada will not make a firm commitment to extend the partial embargo on grain shipments to the Soviet Union for the crop year starting Aug. 1, because of signs the U.S. embargo remains in name only, Canadian officials said Monday.

President Carter raised the embargo issue in talks Monday in Venice with Prime Minister Trudeau, who said Canada intends to continue its current policy of shipping "normal and traditional" amounts of grain to the Soviet Union.

Rentalsman operation 'crumbling'

By MIKE HUGHES

The services offered by B.C. rentalsman offices are crumbling because of a dramatic increase in the workload caused by the tight rent market, Rentalsman Jim Patterson said today.

Five people in the Vancouver office and one in Victoria have been pulled off their jobs in recent weeks because of stress from the heavy workloads, he said in a telephone interview from Vancouver.

His own secretary, Martha Holmes, with the rentalsman's office since it was first set up six years ago, has been told by her doctor to get away from her job.

"In the last week or so, the stress has been starting to get to me as well," Patterson said.

He met with Consumer Services Minister Jim Nielson and his deputy on Monday and today with treasury board officials in hopes of getting some more help.

He said rentalsman operations in the province need another 40 permanent workers.

This year's budget allows him to hire 15 more but he has to get approval for the remaining 25.

Victoria with a staff of about 12 needs another three employees, Patterson said, as do the other regional offices but the majority of the extra staff members are needed in Vancouver.

Patterson said in the two years that he has been rentalsman, the workload has tripled.

"There are now three times as many telephone calls in a month as there were three years ago," he added.

His office in Vancouver receives 35,000 calls a month, he said, and another 10,000 try to get through but never make it.

"It is at the stage now where staff morale is fading and productivity declining because of the stress from the job," he said.

"The system is crumbling."

Patterson said until he gets more help, some services will have to be cut back.

Some of the smaller monetary claims, non-urgent repair problems and other less urgent business will have to be put off for a while.

"Everyone will be dealt with eventually but in some cases it may take a while," he said.

Patterson urged all tenants with problems to attempt to work things out on their own before calling the rentalsman office in order to relieve the strain on his staff.

He said militancy on the part of both tenants and landlords increases as the rental market tightens.

Tenants tend to fight harder about existing conditions because it may be tough to find another place.

On the other hand landlords know they can be tougher because their tenants don't have as many options as they would if there were more rental units available.

But Patterson said he is really upset at the fact that his secretary is having to leave the job. He said she will be given three months off to see if the rest will be enough.

"The public sometimes just seems to have no heart," he said.

"They seem to think that because you are a public servant they should be able to heap all the abuse on you that they want."

Healthy, wealthy, and washed

VANCOUVER (CP) — Canada's health costs could be cut in half if Canadians washed more often, Jessica Ryan, a New Brunswick pediatric nurse, said Monday.

"I sincerely believe that if everyone in Canada washed their hands five times a day and bathed and shampooed at least once a week, health costs in Canada could be cut in two," she told the biennial meeting of the Canadian Nurses Association.

She said Canadians should be educated on how their bodies work. There are too many children in hospital who simply are constipated, and this costs a great deal of money.

Auto Pact talks gripped by crisis

By CAROL GOAR
FP News Service

OTTAWA — As the worst crisis in decades in the Canadian auto industry deepens, Industry Minister Herb Gray has been holding private meetings with automobile executives in Detroit, preparing to open formal consultations on the controversial Canada-U.S. Auto Pact.

The minister's meetings Monday came at a time of new militancy among auto workers.

There are now 22,000 auto workers permanently without jobs — one out of every four UAW members — and an additional 15,000 workers on temporary layoff.

Industry statistics grow more dismal by the month. As of June 14, Canadian production was down 26 per cent from its 1979 level.

Chrysler last month reported a 58 per cent slide in sales compared with the same period the previous year. Ford's sales plunged by 43 per cent and General Motors reported a 15-per-cent drop.

These are merely the latest indicators of a slump that has been evident for several months in Canada and for well over a year in the U.S.

Last weekend, in one of the most emotion-charged meetings in its history, the Canadian Council of United Auto Workers vowed its members would demonstrate in the streets and take over plants, if necessary, to force the government to provide relief for laid off workers.

Some auto workers are talking about a return to the depression-era tactics in which the UAW was born — when men weren't afraid of a little melodrama on the factory floor.

Gray's latest action, too, comes at a time of increasing restiveness in his own Windsor riding.

Last Friday, a large local auto parts company, Bendix, announced — without any warning to workers — that it was padlocking its doors. The minister arrived home on the weekend to find 800 surprised and angry constituents out of work.

Against this ugly backdrop, Gray will head to Washington Friday to see

Lea given the bounce

Prince Rupert NDP MLA Graham Lea Monday became the first MLA to be ejected from the legislature this session.

Lea was banished by deputy speaker Walter Davidson after a blistering attack on Social Credit dirty tricks.

With debate reaching the boredom stage as the session struggles into its fifth month, Lea, one of the leading NDP hecklers, tore into the government over dirty tricks and questionable election practices.

Speaking on an amendment to the Special Funds Act, Lea called the government sleazy and corruptible but was thrown out before Davidson could ask him to withdraw the statements.

Davidson, who tried to bring Lea to order by pounding his gavel, finally had to rise from his chair.

Lea continued his attack and was ordered out for the day by Davidson.

The amendment, moved last month by Bill King (NDP — Shuswap), stated that because unethical practices have been used to elect MLAs, no public expenditures should be approved by the legislature until questions on such matters are answered.

Outside the house, Lea said: "The electoral practices of the Social Credit party in the last election are politically sleazy and politically corrupt.

"I talk about the redistribution maps, I talk about the $1,000 bills, I talk about forged letters, and when you put all that down if you can't call that anything but sleaze and corruption in the political sense, then I don't know what you could call it."

1981 summit in Vancouver?

ROME (FP) — Speculation is rife among the entourage of touring Prime Minister Trudeau that his government may use the venue of next year's economic summit in Canada as bait for Liberal votes in B.C.

Although Ottawa would seem to be the obvious choice for the 1981 meeting of the seven summit nations, there is speculation the gathering could be held elsewhere — perhaps Vancouver. (Other summit news on page 40.)

Better TV for deaf?

OTTAWA (CP) — A special committee of government and industry officials is undertaking to make television available to the 1.5 million Canadians with impaired hearing, the federal communications department said Monday.

The group will make recommendations on the best way to introduce a new method of solving this problem — a system called closed captioning.

Already used on U.S. TV, closed captioning involves subtitles similar to those on foreign-language films when the viewer's TV set is equipped with a special decoder.

Denticare bill almost ready

B.C.'s long-awaited denticare plan is expected to be introduced in the legislature this week.

Health Minister Rafe Mair said earlier this year he hoped to unveil the program before the end of June. Debate on Mair's ministry spending estimates are expected to begin this week.

Government spokesmen said the legislation setting up denticare has been drafted and there are only a few details remaining.

Indications are that the plan will be phased in over a period of years, probably beginning this fall, with an estimated first-year cost of $35 million. The first stage is expected to cover senior citizens and pre-school children.

Blanket the only clue

Times News Services

KAMLOOPS — A woman reported carrying a baby in a large yellow blanket is the only clue police say they have to follow in the kidnapping of a one-year-old girl from her home Friday.

An RCMP spokesman said Monday a witness reported seeing a woman in her late 20s or early 30s carrying a baby near the boarding area at the Kamloops airport Friday morning, several hours after the infant was reported missing.

A composite drawing of the woman was made by police artists, based on descriptions provided by airport personnel.

The woman apparently boarded a flight for Vancouver and officials at several airports and U.S. border crossings have since been alerted to look out for the woman and baby.

The baby's first name is Marca. Police are not releasing her surname to prevent fake ransom calls to her parents.

The baby was taken from her crib, with her yellow blanket, in the front room of the unlocked house early Friday while her parents slept in another room.

The sought woman is about five feet, seven inches tall and has sharp facial features. Her dark hair was combed in a pony-tail.

As the child's 21-year-old father does not have a large income, police do no believe ransom was the motive.

Prairie rain omega-blocked

The Canadian Press

Meteorological experts have blamed the continuing drought on the Canadian prairies on an atmospheric phenomenon known as an omega block, stalled over the area since winter.

The giant high pressure zone is hovering about 5,000 metres above the parched prairie soil, forcing moist air into the Northwest Territories and the midwestern U.S., John Benci of the Canadian Wheat Board said Monday.

"It is normal for an omega block to influence an area for one or two weeks," said Benci, the board's director of weather and crop surveillance. "When it lasts as long as it has this year, it is very unusual."

He predicted the omega block will remain over Manitoba, Saskatchewan and part of Alberta for at least another four or five days.

Meanwhile, southeastern Saskatchewan got more free water Monday night than it could handle all at once.

A 90-minute outburst, generating winds of up to 83 kilometres an hour, dumped 25 millimetres of rain on the Regina area. And two storms pounded the Yorkton area, northeast of the Saskatchewan capital, with rain and hail, leaving much of that city in what one resident described as a disaster situation.

The downpour added erosion to the problems facing farmers, as it was too late to save crops in most areas.

A skating rink in Francis, 65 kilometres south of Regina, lost its roof.

In Regina, the deluge made two Winnipeg Street subways impassable and filled countless intersections with water. There were reports of flooded basements and several minor power outages in the city.

Amidst all the damage though, some of Regina's inebriated souls found they didn't have to spend the night in jail after a city police dispatcher suggested that officers not bring in any more drunks because the sewer in the police station's basement drunk tank had backed up.

In Yorkton, the first storm struck at about 7 p.m. and the second just after 10. Hail stones, which at times reached the size of golf balls, torrential rains and storm-force winds, left trees uprooted and most streets under about half a metre of water.

Residents of Ebenezer, about 19 kilometres north of Yorkton, also suffered extensive damage. They reported that travel trailers were overturned and power lines in the area were down on Highway 309.
